LAB

L, A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated, a blaf, lof; blæf, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, shall, still, full; except after a diphthong; as, fail, feel, cal, cool. In a word of more syllables, it is written single; as, channel, canal, ignis. It is sometimes put before e, and sounded feebly after it; as, bible, title.

LA. interj. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo; unless it be the French la.] See: look; behold.

To you! if you speak ill of the devil, How he takes it to heart. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

LABDANUM. n. f. A resin, of a strong not unpleasant smell, and an aromack, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub in Crete. Hall.

To LABEFY. v. a [labefacio, Latin.] To weaken; to impair. Dict.

LABELL. n. f. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrap of writing.

When wak'd, I found

This labell on my bosom; whose contering It is from look in hermits, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakspeare's Comedy.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing. On the labell of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Astley's Paragon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a labell or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands, And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd, Shall be the labell to another deed, Or my true heart with treacherous revolt Turn to another, this shall say them oath. Shakspeare's

Vol. II.

LAB

LABENT. adj. [labens, Latin.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Dict.

LABIAL. adj. [labialis, Latin.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History.

Some particular affection of sound in it, owing to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Harris's Elements of Speech.

LABIATED. adj. [labium, Lat.] Formed with lips.

LABIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very early, and first the labiodental, f, v, also the unguaranteed t, d, &c. Harris.

LABORANT. n. f [laborans, Latin.] A chemist. Not in use.

I have shew you a sort of fixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY. n. f. [laboratoire, French.] A chemist's work-room.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemist would in their laboratory take a needful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle.

The flame of love will perform those miracles, they of the tunick boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Deacy of Poetry.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laborieux, French; laboriosus, Latin.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which in the highest glorious, is to be known in the professions, undisturbed in their laborious and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face, and, boldly, to be gentle courteous, and compassionate to all. Shakspeare.

Two specious cave within its farthest part, Was bew'd and tash'd by laborious art, Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war, And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Pope.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

LAB

Do'st thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil, Laborious virtues all: keep them from Cato. Add. &c.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Deacy of Poetry.

I chide laboriously to bear

A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laborious] 1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gangleline, as well as the laboriousness of the work, those watched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged, nor more in the infinite mine. Deacy of Poetry.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LABOUR. n. f. [labour, French, labor, Latin.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail, work.

If I find her honest, I hope not much labour, if she be otherwise, labour will be her lot. Deacy of Poetry.

I sent to know your faith, lest the labour of my tempted you, and our labour be in vain. Deacy of Poetry.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of to great difficulty, it is of performance thereof we may expect the least. Harris.

If you had been the wife of Harris, Six of his labours you'd have done, and paid Your husband to much sweat. Deacy of Poetry.

3. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Meditate labour of the body, as to the preservation of health, and cure of diseases, and of the mind, as to the study, and general instruction. Deacy of Poetry.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Some of women labour than half change, And generation gently drest her. Deacy of Poetry.

Not knowing two labours, a companion Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain, My throats come thicker, and my labours end, Which with her hand the conscious nurse turn'd. Deacy of Poetry.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour.

Grout.

His heart is in continual labour, it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered.

St. John's.

To LABOUR. v. n. [labore, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to the top of that time hill?

—You do climb up it now, look how we labour.

Shakespeare.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd.

More than mine own.

Shakespeare. Ham. VIII.

—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest

His heart's struck injuries.

Shakespeare. K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein.

Franklin.

He is so touch'd with the memory of his benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expiation to repent it.

Notes on the Odyssey.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect.

Coloss. 12.

2. To do work; to take pains.

The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for.

Johnson.

A labouring man that is given to drink, shall not be rich.

Proverbs.

That in the night it may be a guard to us, and labour on the day.

Job.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of.

Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.

The stone that labours up the hill,

Mocking the labourer's toil, returning still,

Is love.

Johnson.

4. To be diseased with. [Morbo laborare, Latin.] Not in use.

They abound with horse,

Of which one want our camp doth only labour.

Johnson.

I was called to another, who in childhood laboured of an ulcer in her left hip.

Johnson.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal like the fury flies,

Here hides her hated head, and fies the labouring

Idiot.

Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fight her from the throne,

As sounding cymbal, aid the labouring moon.

Dryden's Lovers.

This exercise will call down the favour of heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions which now labour under from you.

Wick's Preparation for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,

When she was labouring in the way of birth,

For the unborn child the fatal hour came,

And rais'd it up, and laid it on the flame.

Dryden's Ovid.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar roars,

And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God.

Pope.

To LABOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty, to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment.

Johnson.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand,

Th' angel and art you might command,

To labour on for Troy.

Dryden's Aeneid.

And I desire to know something concerning him who occasioned mankind to labour, the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. To beat; to labour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,

And labour him with many a sturdy stroke.

Dryden.

LABOURER. n. s. [laboureur, French.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot.

Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the labourer of the year,

Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,

To twelv' those tides, which from the line did bear

Their funeral vessels to the Belgian shore.

Dryden.

Labourers and idle persons, children and strumpets, old men and young men, must have divers dicta.

Shakespeare.

Not balmy sleep to labourers faint with pain,

Not sleep is to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,

Are half to channings, is thy fight to me.

Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,

Health to himself, and to his infants bread,

The labourer bears.

Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee, until the merchant to the prince,

I have no need of thee.

Scott.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat, get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man happine.

Shakespeare.

He done that labours up the hill,

Mocking the labourer's toil, returning still,

Is love.

Johnson.

LABOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

Forget

Your labour me and dainty times, wherein

You mark great Jove angry.

Shakespeare.

He hath, my lord, by labouring no petition,

Wrung from me my slow leave.

Shakespeare.

LABRA. n. s. [Spanish.] A lip. Not used.

Word of denial in thy labras here;

Word of denial, food and I am thou left.

Shakespeare.

LABYRINTH. n. s. [labyrinthus, Latin.] A maze; a place formed with intricate windings.

Suffolk, stay;

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;

I here mine ears, and ugly treasons lurk.

Shakespeare.

Words, which would tear

A labyrinth of a maid's lost ear.

My clamours tear

The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air.

Shakespeare.

The east of Ellex had not proceeded with his accustomed manners and skill, but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself.

Johnson.

Maze is on her journey; do not now

Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself

In the maze and winding labyrinth of the world.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable, and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree.

1. The thick lac. 2. The red lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom.

LACE. n. s. [lacet, French; laqueus, Lat.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,

Himself to free without; but all in vain:

For staying more, the more in laces strong

Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain

In liny lares, the subtil loops among.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lace.

Faust.

3. A plaited string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O! cut my lace, left, my heart cracking, in Break too.

Shakespeare.

Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,

Or throw cold water in her face.

Shakespeare.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces, and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whole thread is coarse and round,

But trimm'd with curious lace.

Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word, now out of use.

If hardly he the self pursues,

That read and comment upon news;

He takes up then mysterious lace,

He drinks his coffee without lace.

Pope.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a string run through eilet holes.

I caus'd a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened.

Johnson.

At last, for new replies he did not stay,

But laced his crest'd helm, and rode away.

Dryden.

Each laced his spoils, now made the victor's gain,

He to his body suits, but suits in vain;

Mellapour's helm he finds among the rest,

And laces on, and wears the waving crest.

Dryden.

Like Mrs. Primly's green belly, she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips.

Johnson.

When Jenny's stays are laced, and Fan Alma plays about her waist.

Pope.

2. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night gown in respect of your; cloth of gold and coats, and laced with silver.

Shakespeare.

3. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks

Do lace the evening cloud; in yonder East,

Night's candle is burnt out, and jocunda day

Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains' tops.

Shakespeare.

Then clap four slices of pillar on it,

That, laced with bits of rustic, make a front.

Pope.

4. To beat; to whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lace.

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye.

L'Estrange.

LACED Mutton. An old word for a whore.

Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, give you letter to her a laced mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour.

Shakespeare.

LACI MAN. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a conjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Caesar, or Nero.

Addison's Spectator.

LACERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily be open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable composition.

To LACERATE. v. a. [lacro, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth.

Johnson.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear.

Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERATION. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

LAC

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small caules. Abbutnot.

LACRATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperance of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LACHRYMAL. adj. [lacrimal, French.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it.

Cheyne's Philophaical Principles.

LACHRYMARY. adj. [lacrimal, Latin.] Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels? Addison.

LACHRYMATION. n. f. [from lacrimal, Latin.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

LACHRYMATORY. n. f. [lacrimal, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

LACINIATED. adj. [from lacina, Lat.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK. v. a. [lacken, to lessen, Dutch.] To want, to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer who regardeth the very meanings, groans, and sighs of the heart. Hooker.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness: thou shalt not lack any thing in it. Deut. viii. 9.

One day we hope thou shalt bring back, Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel. Intreat they may, authority they lack. Daniel.

To LACK. v. n.

1. To be in want.

Thelons do lack and suffer hunger. Corn. Prayers.

2. To be wanting.

Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Genesis, xiii. 18.

There was nothing lacking to them. David recovered all. 1 Sam. xxx. 19.

That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Want; need; failure.

In the scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker.

Many that are not mad Have sure more lack of reason. Shakespeare.

He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knowles.

The treachant blade, Toledo trusty, For want of fighting was grown rusty, And eat into itself, for lack Of somebody to hew and hack. Hudibras.

2. Lack, whether noun or verb, is now almost obsolete.

LACKBRAIN. n. f. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

LACKER. n. f. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LACKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with lacker.

What shook the stage, and made the people stare? Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair.

LAC

LACKEY. n. f. [laquais, Fr.] An attending servant; a foot-boy.

They would shame to make me

Wait else at door, a fellow counsellor,

'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys!

Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,

He's cautious to avoid the coach and fix,

And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden's Juvenal

Lackeys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator.

To LACKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,

Goes to and back, lacking the varying tide,

To rot itself with motion. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

So dear to heav'n is faintly chastity,

That when a soul is found sincerely so,

A thousand liveried angels lackey her,

Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton.

To LACKEY. v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.

Of late I servants seen on horses ride,

The free and noble lackey by their side. Sandys.

Our Italian translator of the Aeneis is a foot poet; he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LACKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

LACKLUSTRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,

And looking on it with lacklustre eye,

Says very wily, It is ten o'clock. Shakespeare.

LACONICK. adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconicus, Fr.] Short, brief; from Laconia, the Spartans, who used few words.

I grow laconick even beyond laconism; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

LACONISM. n. f. [laconisme, Fr. laconismus, Lat.] A concise style: called by Pope, laconicism. See LACONICK.

As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it.

It is the short-hand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Claudian of the Affair.

LACONICALLY. adv. [from laconick.] Briefly; concisely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot lac. n. n. Camden's Remains.

LACTARY. adj. [lactarius, Lat.] Milky; full of juice like milk.

From lactary or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blue and yellow. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LACTARY. n. f. [lactarium, Lat.] A dairy house.

LACTATION. n. f. [lacto, Lat.] The act of giving suck.

LACTAL. adj. [from lac, Lat.] Milky; conveying chyle of the colour of milk.

As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious

by the lactal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Lucas.

LACTEAL. n. f. The vessel that conveys chyle.

The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment.

LAD

in people of lax constitutions, whereas their spincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres. Arbutnot.

LACTEUS. adj. [lacteus, Latin.] 1. Milky.

Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Lactial; conveying chyle.

The lungs are suitable for inspiration, and the lacteous vessels for the reception of the chyle. Bentley.

LACTESCENT. n. f. [lactescens, Latin.] Tendency to milk, or milky colour.

This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTESCENT. adj. [lactescens, Latin.] Producing milk, or a white juice.

Amongst the pot herbs are some lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice. Arbutnot.

LACTIFEROUS. adj. [lac and fero.] What conveys or brings milk.

He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. f. [leobe, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Leve, a boy.]

1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.

We were

Two lads, that thought there war no more behind,

But such a day to morrow as to-day,

And to be boy eternal. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The poor lad who wants knowledge must sit his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing. Locke.

Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools. Watts.

2. A boy; a young man, in pastoral language.

For grief whereof the lad would as for joy,

But find a way in anguish, and felt world's annoy. Shakespeare.

The shepherd lad,

Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat

So many ages. Milton.

LADDER. n. f. [plabne, Saxon.]

1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.

Whole compass is rotten, and carried in time,

And spread as it should be, thine ladder may come. Shakespeare.

Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,

Some run for buckets to the lath'd quene,

Some cut the pipes, and some the engine's plun,

And some more bold mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

Easy in words thy stile, in sense sublime,

'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,

Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Pope.

I saw a huge erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitant's, with two or three ladders to mount it. Godwin's Travels.

2. Any thing by which one climbs.

Then took she help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a lascivious ambition, and such a one, who wanting true satisfaction to rest him, would make a ladder of any mischievous. Sicily.

I must climb her window,

The ladder made of cords. Shakespeare.

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which

My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakespeare.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,

3. A gradual rise.

Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADE. n. f.

Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon lade, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the water into the sea, or into some greater river.

Gibson's Camden.

To LADE. v. a. preter. laded; and part. passive, laded or laden. [from plāden, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.

And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence. Genesis, xlii. 26.

The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and shewing what burthen they will bear. Bacon.

The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea With prosperous winds; a woman leads the way. Dryden.

Though the peripatetic doctrine does not fasten, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulty, he changes on it, as for a whole his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

At LARGE. Without restraint; without confinement.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large. Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduc'd their shapes immense; and were at large,
Though without number still. Milton.

The children are bred up in their fathers' way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Spratt.

Your zeal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addison.

At LARGE. Diffusely; in the full extent.

Discover more at large what cause that was,
I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakespeare.
Does not belong to this place to have that point discuss'd at large. Watts.

At LARGE. [from large.] Extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely; amply.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations. Watts on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:
How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dryd.
Those, who in warmer climes complain
From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own, that pain is largely paid
By generous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly; without sparing.

'I hey their till of love, and love's disport,
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the scal. Milton.

LARUM. n. f. [from alarum or alarm.]
1. Alarm; noise; notice; danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard;
When cause requir'd, but never out of time. Shakespeare.
The peaking cornute, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter. Shakespeare.

How far off lie these armies?
—Within a mile and half.

—Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours. Shakespeare.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howell.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Locke.

The young Aeneas, all at once let down,
Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Danvers.

LASCI'VIENT. adj. [lascivient, Latin.] Frolicksome; wantoning.

LASCI'VIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Latin.]

1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?
—Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakespeare.
He on Eve

Began to cast lascivious eyes, she him
As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn. Milton.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable difficulties which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deity his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim visag'd war hath smother'd his wrinkl'd front;

And now, instead of mounting harbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakespeare.

LASCI'VIOUSNESS. n. f. [from lascivious.]

Wantonnefs; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his Elegies, and his Art of Love. Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

LASCI'VIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.]

Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

LASH. n. f. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dutch, to strike; whence flask and lash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of flogging lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryd.
Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,

2. The theng or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lasp of elm,
Her waggoner a small grey coated gnat. Shakespeare.
I observed that your whip wanted a lasp to it. Addison.

3. A leash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare; out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lasp,
With losses on every side. Tassie's Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lasp at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Estrange.

TO LASH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Lash hence these over-wearing rags of France. Shak.
He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd
He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.
Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.
Leaning on his lance, he mount his car,
His fiery couriers lapping through the air. Garth.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;
He falls; and lapping up his heels, his rider throws. Dryden.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

The winds grow high,
Impending tempests charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighted shores. Prior.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain, Flatterers and bigots even in Louis' reign. Pope.

5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship: properly to lace.

TO LASH. v. n. To ply the whip.

They lash aloud, each other they provoke,
And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke. Dryden.
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice,
To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.
Let men out of their way lash on ever so fast, they are not at all the nearer their journey's end. South.

Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;

The lapping whip rebounds. Gay's Trivia.

LASHER. n. f. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes.

LASS. n. f. [from lad is formed laddest, by contraction lass.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vig'rous lads to show
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd. Waller.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain-dealing lass it was. L'Estrange.

They sometimes an hasty kiss
Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn,
And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.

LASSITUDE. n. f. [lassitude, Latin; lassitudo, French.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolli-tion. Baron's Natural History.

Affidity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More's Amulet against Asbestos.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Watts.

From mouth and nose the biting torrent ran,
And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope's Ody.

2. [In physick]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempered state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest: it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

LASSLORN. n. f. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Brown groves,
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves,
Being lasslorn. Shakespeare's Tempest.

LAST. n. f. [late, Saxon; laetse, Dutch.]

1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back? Samuel.
O, may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still,
Last came Adonis, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.

I will slay the last of them with the sword. Amos.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell. Coraley.

The swans, that on Cayster often try'd
Their tuneful songs, now sung their last, and dy'd. Addison.

O! may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.

But, while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear. Prior.

Here, last of Britons, let your names be read.
Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

4. The lowest; the meanest.

Antiochus
Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest. Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.

6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and pow'r; their last endeavours bend
To outshine each other. Dryden's Lucius.

7. At LAST. In conclusion; at the end.

God, a troop shall overcome him; but he shall overcome at the last. Gn. xlix. 19.

Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with every blast,
Grown old, and destitute of oil,
Rust to a point, and fix at last. Prior.

8. The LAST; the end.

All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

LAST. adv.

1. The last time; the time next before the present.

How long is't now since last yourself and I
Were in a mack? Shakespeare.

When last I dy'd; and, dear! I'll
As often as from thee I go,
I can remember yet that I
Something did say, and something did bestow. Dante.

2. In conclusion.

Pleas'd with his lot, he commands, adorns;

TO LAST. v. n. [laetan, Saxon.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.

All more lasting than beautiful. Sidney.

I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace, to prefix your name before the essays: for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon.

With several degrees of lasting, ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.

These are standing marks of facts delivered by those who were eye-witnesses to them, and which were contrived with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.

LAST. n. f. [late, Saxon.]

1. The mould on which shoes are formed.

The cobbler is not to go beyond his last. L'Estrange.
A cobbler produced several new grins, having been used to cut faces over his last. Addison's Spectator.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone would wrench the unwary step aside. Gay.

2. [Last, German.] A load; a certain weight or measure.

LA'STERY. n. f. A red colour.

The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery. Spenser.

LA'STAGE. n. f. [lastage, Fr. lastage, Dut. playt, Sax. a load.]

1. Custom paid for freightage.

2. The ballast of a ship.

LA'STING. participial adj. [from last.]

1. Continuing; durable.

Every violence offered weakens and impairs, and renders the body less durable and lasting. Ray.

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones. Boyle on Colours.

The grateful work is done,
The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun;
Frauds, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,
And fix'd the causes of a lasting hate. Dryden.

A sinew crack'd seldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

LA'STINGLY. adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

LA'STINGNESS. n. f. [from lasting.] Durableness; continuance.

All more lasting than beautiful, but that the consideration of the exceeding lastingness made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney.

Consider the lastingness of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton's Opticks.

LA'STLY. adv. [from last.]

1. In the last place.

I will justify the quarrel; secondly, balance the forces; and, lastly, propound variety of designs for choice, but not advise the choice. Bacon.

2. In the conclusion; at last; finally.

LATCH. n. f. [latse, Dutch; laccro, Italian.] A catch of a door moved by a string, or a handle.

The latch mov'd up. Gay's Pastoral.
Then comes rosy health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

TO LATCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a latch.

He had strength to reach his father's house: the door was only latched; and, when he had the latch in his hand, he turned about his head to see his pursuer. Locke.

2. [Lacher, French.] To smear.

But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice, as I did bid thee do? Shak.

LATCHES. n. f.

Latches or latches, in a ship, are small lines like lines of small twine, used to fasten the bottom and drablers of a ship, in order to lace the bonnets to the courses, or the drablers to the bonnets. Harv.

LA'TCHET. n. f. [lacet, French.] The string that fastens the shoe.
 There cometh one mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose.

Mark, i. 7.
LATE. adj. [læt, Saxon; last, Dutch; in the comparative latter or later, in the superlative latest or last. Last is absolute and definite, more than latest.]
 1. Contrary to early; slow; tardy; long delayed.

My hasting days fly on with full career,
 But my late spring no bud nor blossom sheweth.

 Just was the vengeance, and to last days
 Shall long posterity rebound thy praise.

Pope's Odyssey.
 2. Last in any place, office, or character.
 All the difference between the late servants, and those who staid in the family, was, that those latter were finer gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.
 3. The deceased: as, the works of the late Mr. Pope.

4. Far in the day or night.

1. After long delays; after a long time.
 It is used often with too, when the proper time is past.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
 And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shakesp.

A second Silvius after these appears,
Silvius Æneas, for thy name he bears:
 For arms and justice equally renown'd,
 Who late restor'd in Alba shall be crown'd. Dryd.

He laughs at all the giddy turns of state,
 When mortals teach too soon, and fear too late.

Dryden.
 The later it is before any one comes to have these ideas, the later also will it be before he comes to those maxims. Locke.

I might have spar'd his life,
 But now it is too late. Philips's Disgraced Mother.

2. In a later season.

To make roses, or other flowers, come late, is an experiment of pleasure; for the ancients esteemed much of the rose sera. Bacon's Natural History.

There be some flowers which come more early, and others which come more late, in the year. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Lately; not long ago.

They arrived in that pleasant isle,
 Where sleeping late, she left her other knight. Spenser.

 Ill-matching words and deeds long past or late. Milton.

The goddess with indulgent cares,
 And social joys, the late transform'd repairs. Pope.
 From fresh pastures, and the dewy field,
 The lowing herds return, and round them throng
 With leaps and bounds the late imprison'd young. Pope.

4. Far in the day or night.

Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
 That you do lie so late?
 —Sir, we were carousing till the second cock. Shakesp.

Late the nocturnal sacrifice begun,
 Nor ended till the next returning fun. Dryden.

5. Of late, lately; in times past; near the present. Late in this phrase seems to be an adjective.

Who but felt of late? Milton.
 Who have of late made use of a pendulum, as a steady regulator. Locke.

LATELY. adj. [from late.] Related; surprised by the night.

- TO LAVE. v. a. [lavo, Latin.]

1. To wash; to bathe.

Unlute, that we must lave our honours
In these so flack'ring streams. Shakespeare.

But as I rose out of the laving stream, Heav'n open'd her eternal doors, from whence
The spirit descended on the like a dove. Milton.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Whose low-laid mouths each mounting billow laves,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length,
She seems a sea-wasp flying on the waves. Dryden.

2. [Lever, Fr.] To throw up; to-lade; to draw out.

Though hills were set on hulls,
And seas met seas to guard thee, I would through:
I'd plough up rocks, steep as the Alps, in dust,
And lave the Tyrrhene waters into clouds;
But I would reach thy head. Ben Jonson.

Some stow their oars, or stop the leaky sides,
Another holder yet the yard bestrides,
And folds the sails; a fourth with labour laves
Th' intruding seas, and waves ejects on waves. Dryden.

In her chaste current oft the goddess laves,
And with celestial tears augments the waves. Pope.

- TO LAVER. v. a. To change the direction often in a course.

How easy 'tis when destiny proves kind,
With full-bred sails to run before the wind:
But those that 'gainst stiff gales *laver*ing go,
Must be at once resolv'd, and skilful too. Dryden.

- LA VENDER. n. s. [lavandula, Lat.] A plant.

It is one of the verticillate plants, whose flower consists of one leaf, divided into two lips: the upper lip, standing upright, is roundish, and, for the most part, bifid; but the under lip is cut into three segments, which are almost equal: these flowers are disposed in whorls, and are collected into a slender spike upon the top of the stalks. Millet.

The whole lavender plant has a highly aromatick smell and taste, and is famous as a cephalick, nervous, and uterine medicine. Hill.

And then again he turneth to his play,
To spoil the pleasures of that paradise!

The wholesome sage, and lavender still grey,
Rank smelling rue, and cummin good for eyes. Spenser.

- LA VOIR. v. s. [lavoir, Fr. from lave.] A washing vessel.

Let us go find the body where it lies Soak'd in his enemies blood, and from the stream
With lavoirs pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off
The clotted gore. Milton's Agonists.

He gave her to his daughters, to imbath
lavender & lavois strew'd with asphodell. Milton.
Young Arcus from forth his bridal bow'r Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour. Pope's Quid.

lachen, German and Dutch; lack, Scottish.]

1. To make that noise which sudden merriment excites

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.

Shakespeare.

There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried,
Murder!

They wak'd each other. Shakespeare.

At this fusty stuff

The large Achilles, on his yest-bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakespeare.

Laughing causeth a continued expulsion of the breath with the loud noise, which maketh the interjection of laughing, shaking of the breast and sides, running of the eyes with water, if it be violent.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.

Entreat her not the work, in that I pry
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if

You do it her.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd.

Dryden.

The plenteous board, high heap'd with eates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine.

Pope.

3. To LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule

Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave stone daily: make thine epitaph,
That death in thee at others lives may laugh.

Shakespeare.

'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council; you'll be laughed at.

Shakespeare.

The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expence.

Addison.

No wit to flatter left of all his store;

No fool to laugh at, which he valued more.

Pope.

- To LAUGH, v. a. To deride; to scorn.

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A wicked soul shall make him laugh to scorn of his enemies.

Exalt, vi. 4.

- LAUGH, n. f. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But frisks a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.

Pope.

- LAUGHABLE, adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.

Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:
Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of fust, vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable.

Shakespeare.

Casaubon confesses Perius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer.

Dryden.

- LAUGHER, n. f. [from laugh.] A manifold of merriment.

I am a common laugher.

Shakespeare.

Some higher men cannot be of the general opinion,
but the laughers are much the majority.

Pope.

- LAUGHINGLY, adv. [from laughing.] In a merry way; merrily.

- LAUGHINGSTOCK, n. f. [laugh and stock.] A butt; an object of ridicule.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockery.

Spenser.

Pray you, let us not be laughing-stocks to other men's humours.

Shakespeare.

- LAUGHTER, n. f. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.

To be worst,

The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.

The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter.

Shakespeare.

The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves.

Brown.

We find not that the laughter-loving dame Mourn'd for Anchises.

Wallar.

Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter.

Prior.

- LA'VISH, adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.

It may be plausibly derived from to lave, to throw out; as profundere vas, is to be lavish]

1. Prodigal; wasteful;—indiscreetly liberal.

His jolly brother, opposit in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, carous, and guttles, in his own defence.

Dryden.

The same has been too lavish of her feast,
And set him till he loaths.

Roma's Jane Shore.

2. Scattered in waste; profuse;—as, the coat was lavish.

3. Wild; unrestrained.

Confronted him, rubbing his lavish spirit.

Shakespeare.

- To LA'VISH, v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion; to waste; to squander.

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands?

Addison.

- LA'VISHLY, adv. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

- LA'VISHLY, adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

My father's purposes have been mistook;
And time about him have too lavishly

Shakespeare.

Wasted his meaning and authority.

Then laughs the childish year with flowrets
crown'd.

Dryden.

And lavishly perfumes the fields around.

Praise to a wit is like rain, to a tender flower;
if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives;
but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him.

Pope.

- LA'VISHMENT, n. f. [from lavish.] Profuseness; prodigality.

- LA'VISHNESS, n. f. [from lavish.] Profusion.

First got with guile, and then preserv'd with head,
And after spent with pride and lavishness.

Fairy Queen.

- To LAUNCH, v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lan, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force a vessel into the sea.

Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught.

Job, vi. 4.

So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch.

Dryden.

For general history, Raleigh and Howell are to be had.

He who would launch farther into the ocean,
may consult Whear.

Locke.

2. To rove at large; to expatiate; to make excursions.

From hence that general care and study springs,
That launching and possession of the mind.

Davies.

Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space.

Locke.

Spenser has not contented himself with submissive

He had not acted in the character of a suppliant, if he had launched out into a long oration. Browne.
I have launched out of my subject on this article.
Arbutnot.

- To LAUNCH, v. a.

1. To push to sea.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England.

King Charles.

With rays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
And so!d on leavers, launch'd her in the deep.

Pope.

2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lance or lance.

The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
Bar'd his 12d arm, and launching from the sky
His withen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook.

Dryden.

- LAUND, n. f. [lande, Fr. lawn, Welsh.] Lawn; a plain extended between woods.

Hammer.

Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,

For through this laund anon the deer will come;
And in this covert will we make our stand.

Shakespeare.

- LAUNDRESS, n. f. [lavandiere, French; Skinner imagines that lavandareffs may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash clothes.

The countess of Richmond would often say,
On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress.

Camden.

Take up these cloaths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet Mead.

Shakespeare.

The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half.

Swift.

- LAUNDY, n. f. [as if lavanderie.]

1. The room in which clothes are washed.

The affairs of the family ought to be consulted,
whether they concern the stable, dairy, the pantry, or laundry.

Swift.

2. The act or state of washing.

Chalky water is too fretting, as appeareth in laundry of cloaths, which wear out apace.

Bacon.

- LAVOLTA, n. f. [la volie, French.] An old dance, in which was much turning and much capering.

Hammer.

I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt; nor sweeten talk;
Nor play at subtle games.

Shakespeare.

- LAUREATE, adj. [laureatus, Lat.] Decked or invested with a laurel.

Did Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureate hearth where Lycid lies.

Milton.

Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines.

Pope.

- LAUREATION, n. f. [from laureate.] It denotes, in the Scottish universities, the act or state of having degrees conferred, as they have in some of them a flowery crown, in imitation of laurel among the ancients.

- LAUREL, n. f. [laurus, Lat. laurier, Fr.] A tree, called also the cherry bay.

The laurus or laurel of the ancients is affirmed by naturalists to be what we call the bay tree.

Amfow.

The laurel, meed of mighty conquerors,
And poets sage.

Fairy Queen.

The laurel or cherry-bay, by cutting away the side branches, will rise to a large tree.

Mariner.

- LAURELED, adj. [from laurel.] Crowned or decorated with laurel; laureate.

Hear'st thou the news? my friend! th' express is come

Then future ages with delight shall see How Plato's, Bacon's, Newton's, looks agree;
Or in fair series laurel'd bards be shown,
A Virgil there, and here an Addison. Pope.
LAW. n. f. [lags, Saxon; loi, French;
laugh, Erse.]

1. A rule of action.

That which doth assign unto each thing the kind,
That which doth moderate the force and power, that which doth appoint the form and measure of working; the same we term a law. Hooker.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws!
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause. Dryden.

2. A decree, edict, statute, or custom, publickly established as a rule of justice.

Ordain them laws, part such as appertain
To civil justice, part religious rites. Milton.

Our nation would not give laws to the Irish, therefore now the Irish gave laws to them. Davies.

The lowing herds wind slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

LEAD. n. f. [læb, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11.322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not be that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriae, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakespeare.

Of lead, some I can show you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

4. Any thing foliated, or thinly beated.

Eleven ounces two pence sterling ought to be of so pure silver, as is called leaf silver, and then the melter must add of other weight seventeen pence halfpenny tarding. Camden.

Leaf gold, that flies in the air as light as down,
Is as truly gold as that in an ingot. Dryden.

To LEAF. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring leaves; to bear leaves.

Most trees fall off the leaves at autumn's and if not kept back by cold, would leaf about the foliage. Brown.

LEAFLESS. adj. [from leaf.] Naked of leaves.

Rare honesty, without some other adornment, being looked on as a leafless tree, nobody will take harm to it its shelter. Government of the Tongue.

Where doves in flock the leafless trees o'er shade,
And lonely woodcocks haunt the wat'ry glade. Pope.

LEAFY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves

The fraud of men were ever so,
Since summer was first leafy. Shakspere.

What chance, good lady, hath bereft you thus?
—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Milton.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
I extend my uncontroul'd and boundless reign.

Dryden.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread
That hocks of birds, that ying the liquid air, Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

So when some sweet'ring-travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool fountains verge
Of Parah, translation streams; her tail
A grilly hydra suddenly shouts forth. Philips.

LEAGUE. n. f. [league, French; ligo, Lat.]

A confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.

Shakspere.

We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shakspere.
Thou shalt be in league with the strokes of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baalha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chron. xvi. 3.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in lovereignty, or a conjunction in packs or leagues; the c are other bands of society and implicit confederations.
Leaven's Holy Wars.

I, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bounds, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton.

Oh Tyrians, with immortal hate Pursue this hated race: and let there be Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

To LEAGUE. v. n. To unite; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependances.

LEAGUE. n. f. [lieu, French.]

1. A league; leuca, Latin; from lech, Welsh; a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.

2. A measure of length, containing three miles.

Bre the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter'd by a mighty rock. Shakspere.

Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd. Addison.

LEAGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs? Philips.

LEAGUER. n. f. [beleggeren, Dutch.]
Siege; investment of a town.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Shakspere.

LEAK. n. f. [leck, leke, Dutch.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure: breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath faculties to stop. Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship. Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overlet with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

To LEAK. v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a Jordan, and then we leak in your chimney. Shakspere.

His feet should be washed every day in cold water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak, and let in water. Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again.

Walsley.

Golden hair-bung, o'er their heads
And seem'd so crowded, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire.

Dryden and La.

LEAKAGE. n. s. [from leak.] Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LEAKY. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee.

Shakspeare.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you night.

Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret.

L'Estrange.

TO LEAN. v. n. præter. leaned or leant.
[blind, Saxon; leuch, Dutch.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Lean thine age o' back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my disease. Shakspeare.
Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a scepter in her hand, before an altar. Pecham or Draving.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters.

Watson.

Upon his iv'ry sceptre first he leant,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament.

Dryden.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erfaint,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leans.

Dryden.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fall under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most.

Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood. Gay.
'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around Tomson.

Leans the huge elephant.

2. To propend; to tend towards.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs,
though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient.

Spenser.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Prov. iii. 5.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judgment strangely.

Watson.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night.

Shakspeare.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down; and leaning on her knees,

Invok'd the cause of all her miseries. Dryden.
The gods came downward to behold the wars,
Sharp'ning their fights, and leaning from their stars.

Dryden.

LEAN. adj. [blaze, Saxon.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bareboned.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants;
Lean famine, quivering steel, and clinking fire.

Shakspeare.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals! who would'er I suppose,
They had such courage and industry.

Shakspeare.

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.

Shakspeare.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave.

Shakspeare.

Seven other kine came up out of the river, illfavour'd and lean-bellied.

Gen. xli. 3.

Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation.

Bacon.

And fetch their precepts from the cynic's tub,
Praising the lean and sallow abstinence.

Millon.

Swear that Adrastus, and the lean look'd prophetess joint conspirators.

Dryden and La.

Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the veins.

Arbutnot.

No laughing grace; wanton in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking in low care,
Dwell on my brow.

Rome's Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.
There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water.

Burke.

3. Low; poor; in opposition to great or rich.
That which combined us was most great, and let not

A lean action reach us.

Shakspeare.

4. Jeune; not comprehensive; not embellish'd; as, a lean dissertation.

LEAN. n. s. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.

With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through rills of fat, and deluges of lean.

Fa'guhar.

LEANLY. adv. [from lean.] Meagrely;
without plumpness.

LEANNESS. n. s. [from lean.]

1. Emaciation of body; want of flesh; meagreness.

If thy leanest loves' such food,
There art thou, that, for thy sake,

Do enough.

Ben Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejections, leanness, and weakness.

Arbutnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor king Reigner, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.

Shakspeare.

TO LEAP. v. n. [Heapan, Saxon; leap, Scottish.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my sword on, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

A man leaps better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be pro-portionable, strengtheneth the fibres by counterbalancing them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise.

Bacon.

In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it.

Cowley.

Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield

Her bearded lance.

Dryden's Amcl.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mild-ness, who in a leap leaped from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again.

Elphinstone.

After he went into the tent, and found her not,
he leaped out to the people.

Watson.

He runs upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps.

Shakspeare.

Strat leaping from his horse he laid me up.

Roder.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy.
I am warr'd, my heart.

Watson.

Leaps at the thumper's voice, and burns for glory.

Watson.

4. To fly; to start.

He started frowning from me, as if ruin
leap'd from his eyes, so looks the thirled lion Upon the daring handman that o'er gall'd him.

Then makes him nothing.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out.

Job. xl. 19.

TO LEAP. v. a.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country.

L'Estrange.

As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who leaps before his eyes the depth betwixt Stones shot.

Dryden's Spanish F. yer.

She dares pursue, if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails,
She treads the stream, or leaps the pales.

Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.

'Tis no fear they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow.

Dryden's George.

LEAP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

After they have curst this wide life over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken and winded?

L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from vice extreme to another unnatural.

L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of the king intrudely out of the hands of the nobles; which was to great leaps, and caused such a confusion in the state, that the constitution could not bear.

Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse.

L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How the cheats her bellowing lover's eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny.

Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.

Methinks, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon.

Shakspeare.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And was your own destruction.

Shakspeare.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where you old fisher views the waves from high!

Dryden.

LEAP-FROG. n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

LEAP-YEAR. n. s.

Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year; and is called so from its leaping a day more than the common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but
28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:

Divide by 4; what's left shall be:
For leap-year or for past 1, 2, 3.

Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year is; that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the computations; and this is the occasion of the bissextile leap-year.

Brown.

LEARN. v. n. [leornian, Saxon.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.

Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matt. xxiv. 32.
In a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue.

Kneller.

Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind.

Dryden.

You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:

All that can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Phillips.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach;
to gain or impart knowledge.] This sense is now obsolete.

He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly wife,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakspeare. Tempest.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shak.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakspeare. Cymbeline.
TO LEARN. v. n. To take pattern:
with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly. Matth. xi. 29.
In imitation of sounds, that Man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Natural History.

LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]

1. ARNED in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way
the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such Labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile.
Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.
The best account is given of them by their own authors; but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbutnot on Const.

2. SKILLED; SKILLFUL; KNOWING: with in.

Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,

Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts.
Granville.

3. SKILLED in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learn'd, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seemed in his eye, but learnedly mad.
Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakspeare.
Every coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]

1. LITERATURE; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile;
then its strength of years, when solid and, lastly,
its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. SKILL in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long silence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Grannt's Bills of Mortality.

LEASE. n. f. [laisser, French. Spelman.]

A contract by which, in consideration of me payment, a temporary possession is anted of houses or lands.

My cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
I'd have let this land by lease. Shakspeare.

Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease.

I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops ' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate.
Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakspeare.

Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease. Milton.

TO LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] TO let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliffe.

TO LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dutch.] TO glean;
to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chase-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire.
Dryden.

LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner;
gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of lesors and gleaners. Swift.

LEASH. n. f. [lesse, French; lesse, Dutch;
laccio, Italian.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a courser leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakspeare.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following My leash unwillingly. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shakspeare.

Some thought when he did gabble
Th' ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull ghosts. Dennis's Letters.

A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

TO LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] TO bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Light in likehounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakspeare's Henry V.

LEASING. n. f. [leaze, Saxon.] Lies;
falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing?

He'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell.
Shakspeare's Tale.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery;
Two filthy blots in noble sentry. Shakspeare's Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leashing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever verified my friends
With all the fist that verity

Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leashing. Shakspeare.

As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leashing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deserted:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd afflict the swain! Gay.
LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [layr, Saxon. This word Wallis would persuade us to write less, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.

I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Gen. xxxii. 10.

A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to wave his suit,
Or for a while play least in fight. Hudibras.

Ev'n that avert; I chase it not;
But taste it as the least unhappy lot. Dryden.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope.

AT LEAST. } To say no more; not

AT THE LEAST. } to demand or affirm

AT LEASTWISE. } more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.

He who tempts, though in vain, at least asperges
The tempted with dishonour. Milton.

He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bestowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton.

Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.

Every effect doth after a sort contain, at leastwise resemble, the cause from which it proceedeth.

Honour and fame at least the thund'rer ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a God. Pope.

The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the omniscient Being. Dryden.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton.

Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts.

LEASER. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, French, or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture.
Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left loose and leasy. Afham's Schoolmaster.

LEATHER. n. f. [leder, Saxon; leath, Erie.]

1. DRESSED hides of animals.

He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. 2 Kings, i. 8.

And if two boots keep out the weather,

That peace, Oh happy shade! be ever thine.

Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger.

Lev. xix. 10.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is.

Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a valiant, I leave the reader to judge.

Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us.

1 Sam. ix. 5.

14. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point.

Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting.

Addison's Spectator.

15. To LEAVE off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air.

Arbutnot.

16. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

You may partake; I have told 'em who you are.—I should be loth to be left out, and here too.

Ben Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there.

Bacon.

Befriend till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere ake mourn on the Indian seas
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.

Milton.

We ask, if those spout
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we are none out of matter leave?

Blackmore.

great deal of judgment, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Abneid.

Addison on Avidy.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, health d, kept alive.

Shakespeare.

Gritius, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed.

Kneller.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait.

Recommens.

3. To LEAVE off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin, But still beget new mischiefs in their courts.

Daniel.

To LEAVE. v. a. [from leavy; lower, French.] To levy; to raise; a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong the leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd.

Spenser's Fairy Queen.

LEAVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be baked with leaven.

Lev. vi. 17.

All fermented meats and drinks are easily digested; and those unfermented, by barn or leaven, are hardly digested.

Floyer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strongly of the old leaven of innovations.

King Charles.

To LE'AVEN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must carry the leav'ning.

Shakespeare.

Whoever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off.

Exod. xii. 17.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites.

Bacon.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unposited,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest.

Prin.

LE'AVEN. n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive.

Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. s. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all.

Bacon's Natural History.

LE'AVINGS. n. s. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal; refuse: it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharsalia.

Addison's Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloc's head,
With scraps and leavings to be fed?

Swift.

LE'AVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves;

Strephon, with leamy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples fur to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitsonide to bear. Sidney.
Now, near enough: your leamy twigs throw down,

And show like those you are. Shakespeare.
To LEECH. v. a. [lecher, Fr.] To lick over. Hammer.

Hast thou yet le bed the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice? Shakespeare.
LE'CHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French: luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.]
A whore-master.

I will now take the lecher; he's at my house;
he cannot 'scape me. Shakespeare.
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shaksf.
The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In his place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.
The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope.
To LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery? No. The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shak.
Gut eats all day, and lecherers all the night
B. Jonson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Lewd;
lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.]
Lewdly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.]
Lewdness.

LE'CHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Lewd-ness; lust.

The reit welter with as little shame in open lechery as swine do in the common mire. Milford.

Against such lewdness, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shaksf.

LE'CTION. n. f. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critic has his own hypothesis if the common text be not favorable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts.

LE'CTURE. n. f. [lecture, French.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Demetrius reads his rustic lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shackle them in the extreme heat. Sidney.

Wrangling pedant,
When in mousk we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shak.
When letters from Caesar were given to Rufinus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lecture. Field's History of Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only teach / But / and talk of, but the labour an / And / education should furnish the mind with,
and / And / there. Locke.

2. The art or practice of reading; perusal.
In the lection of holy scripture, these apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick
A counsellor.

Some p

erated

Why, curst formally

It was a trust intemperately and dogmatically.

To LECTURE. v. n. To read in publick;
to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse: as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LE'CTURER. n. f. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.

2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.

If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Glarendon.

LE'CTURESHIP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.
LED. part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.

The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isa. ix. 16.

As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE. n. f. [leggen, Dutch, to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.

The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson's Architecture.

2. A ridge rising above the rest, or projecting beyond the rest.

The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.

3. Any prominence, or rising part.

Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The bending brow above a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE. n. f. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEF. n. f. [le, French.]

1. Diegs; sediment; refuse: commonly months, my sex, exchange'd for thee,

A mingle with the people's wretched le. Prior.

2. [Seas term; supposed by Skinner from Peau, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on.

To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A lee- ward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as the might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broad-side, so that she will make little or no way. Dryden.

If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our mure of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh.

The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at northwest, making a lee shore in all weathers.
Unprovided of tackling and victuals, they are forced to fly by a storm; yet being so to dangerous splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-foated boat.

Moore by his side under the lee while night
Inveils the sea. Milton.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvass play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. f. [laec, Saxon.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cow- leech.

A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of grieved conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser's Faery Queen.

Her words prevail'd, and then the learn'd leech
His cunning head 'gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Fairy Queen.

Phyack is their bane.
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

While leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis. Dryden.

The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health-restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Roscoe.

A skilful leech
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbuthnot was leech of leeches. Gray's Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood:
it is used to draw blood when the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name:

I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wylmar.
Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood. Reformers.

Without remorse insatiably.

To LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicaments.

LE'ECHECRAFT. n. f. [leech and craft.]
The art of healing.

We study leechcraft, but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Davies.

LEEF. adj. [lieve, leue, Dutch.] Kind;
fond.

Whilome all these were low and leef,
And lov'd their flocks to feed;
They never strove to be the chief,
And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK. n. f. [leac, Saxon; loech, Dutch;
leech, Erse; porrum, Latin.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fluellen? — Yes,
— Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare.

Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchman butter's dear. G. G.

We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the leucy, water-cresses, helleradish, garlic, or leek potage. Flager on Humour.

LEER. n. f. [leern, Saxon.]

1. An oblique view.

For entertainment in leer, the press the leer of inquisition. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
To show advance. Milton.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.

Dama with false pride, conceals with civil leer. Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated minister in all his gear,
With angelic visage, and pernicious leer. Swift.

To LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.]

To look obliquely; to look archly.

He leech upon him as he comes by; and do but meet the countenance that he will give me. Shak.

Consider whether you take the pleasure of indecency, or whether you do not sometimes leer

LEF

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin.
Dryden.

LEES. n. f. [lie, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

The memory of king Richard was so strong,
that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts;
and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up.
Bacon's Henry VII.

If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy notes not their palates with the swine.
B. Jonson.

Those lees that trouble it, refine
The agitated soul of generous wine.
Dryden.

TO LEESE. v. a. [lesen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese,
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese. Tusser.
No cause, nor client fat, will Cheviot leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes fees;
And please both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace.
B. Jonson.

How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which he but for fees.
Donne.

LEET. n. f.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day.
The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon
lethe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thrifhing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowel.

Who has a breast to pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful? Shakespeare's Othello.
You would present her at the leet,
'Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts.
Shakespeare.

LE'WARD. adj. [lee and peard, Saxon.]
Towards the wind. See LEE.

The classice were called long ships, the onerarie round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Arbutnot.

Let no statesman dare
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Lest he should call our commonweal
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd,
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward side,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakefp.
Had such a river as this been left to itself,
to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little leets. Addison.

Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it.
Addison's Spectator.

Sinistrous; not right.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

VOL. II.

LEG

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.
The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right.
Dryden.

The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.
LEFT-HANDED. adj. [left and band.]
Using the left-hand rather than right.
The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LEFT-HANDEDNESS. n. f. [from left-banded.] Habitual use of the left-hand.

B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand.
Donne.

LEG. n. f. [leg, Danish; leggur, Islandick.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haste; and what their tardy feet deny'd,
The trusty staff, their better leg, supply'd. Dryden.
Purging comfits, and antrages,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison.
2. An act of obeisance; a bow with the leg drawn back.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, hip, nor cap. Shakespeare.

Their horses never give a blow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras.
If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Swift.
3. To stand on his own LEGS. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LE'GACY. n. f. [legatum, Latin.]
Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and testament. Cowel.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as it one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by read-

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine
How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shakefp.
Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone
T' augment the number of the blest'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade,
But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children, tumult, strife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LE'GAL. adj. [legal, French; leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.
Whatsoever was before Richard I. was before

LEG

time of memory; and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Black.

2. Lawful; not contrary to law.

3. According to the law of the old dispensation.

His merits

To save them, not their own, though legal, works.

LEGA'LITY. n. f. [legalité, French.] Lawfulness.

TO LE'GALIZE. v. a. [legaliser, French; from legal.] To authorize; to make lawful.

If any thing can legalize revenge, it should be injury from an extremely obliged person: but revenge is so absolutely the peculiar of Heaven, that no consideration can empower, even the best men, to assume the execution of it. South.

LE'GALLY. adv. [from legal.] Lawfully; according to law.

A prince may not, much less may inferior judges, deny justice, when it is legally and competently demanded. Taylor.

LE'GATARY. n. f. [legataire, French; from legatum, Latin.] One who has a legacy left.

An executor shall exhibit a true inventory of goods, taken in the presence of fit persons, as creditors and legataries are, unto the ordinary. Ayliffe.

LE'GATE. n. f. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]

1. A deputy; an ambassador.

The legates from th' Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the cost
And care employ'd, their embassy is lost. Dryden.

2. A kind of spiritual ambassador from the pope; a commissioner deputed by the pope for ecclesiastical affairs.

Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of Heaven.
Shakespeare.

Upon the legate's summons, he submitted himself to an examination, and appeared before him.
Atterbury.

LEGATE'E. n. f. [from legatum, Latin.]
One who has a legacy left him.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legatees are blotted out. Dryden.

My will is, that if any of the above-named le-gates should die before me, that then the respective legacies shall revert to myself. Swift.

LE'GATINE. adj. [from legate.]

1. Made by a legate.

When any one is absolved from excommunication, it is provided by a legatine constitution, that some one shall publish such absolution. Ayliffe.

2. Belonging to a legate of the Roman see.

All those you have done of late,
By your power legatine within this kingdom,
Fall in the compass of a premonition. Shakespeare.

LEGA'TION. n. f. [legatio, Latin.] Deputation; commission; embassy.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal,
and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon.

In attiring, the duke had a fine and unaffected politeness, and upon occasion costly, as in his legations. Wotton.

LEGA'TOR. n. f. [from lego, Latin.] One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Suppose debate-

Between pretenders to a fair estate,
Bequeath'd by some legator's last intent. Dryden.

LE'GEND. n. f. [legenda, Latin.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends begin

else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a fether date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Adelphon.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilst you arm you, aim you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can show the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.
It is the way of attaining to Heaven, that makes profane scornors so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such an inconsistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Adelphon on Medals.

LEGGER. n. f. [from legger, Dutch, 'To lie or remain in a place.'] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the compting-house.

Lord Angelo, having affairs to Heav'n, Intends you for his swift ambassador,
Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shakespeare.
I've giv'n him that,

Which, if he take, shall quite unpeople her
Of leggers for her sweet. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If leger ambassadors or agents were sent to remain near the courts of princes, to observe their motions, such were made choice of as were vigilant.

Who can endeavor

Thy praise too much? thou art Heav'n's leger here, Working against the states of death and hell. Herbert.

He withdrew not his confidence from any of those who attended his person, who, in truth, lay leger for the covenant, and kept up the spirits of their countrymen by their intelligence. Clarendon.

I call that a leger bait, which is fixed, or made to rest, in one certain place, when you shall be absent; and I call that a walking bait which you have ever in motion. Walton.

LEGERDEMAIN. n. f. [contracted perhaps from legereté de main, French.] Slight of hand; juggle; power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion; trick; deception; knack.

He so light was at legerdmain,
That what he touch'd came not to light again. Hubbard.

Of all the tricks and legerdemain by which men impose upon their own souls, there is none so common as the plea of a good intention. South.

LEGERTY. n. f. [legereté, French.] Lightness; nimbleness; quickness. A word not in use.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The senses, though defunct and dead before,
Break their drowsy grave, and newly revive
With a blough and leith legerty. Shakespeare.

LEGGE. adj. [from leg.] Having legs; furnished with legs.

LEGIBLE. adj. [legibilis, Latin.]

1. Such as may be read.

You observe some clergymen with their heads
Down within an inch of the cushion, to read
Is hardly legible. Swift.

His opinions of themselves are legible in their countenances. Thus a kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprise in his air and motion; it stamps value and significance upon his face. Collier.

LEGIBLY. adv. [from legible.] In such a manner as may be read.

LEGION. n. f. [legio, Latin.]

1. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand.

The most remarkable piece in Antoninus's pillar is, the figure of Jupiter Pluvius sending rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies, which is the greatest confirmation possible of the story of the Christian legion. Adelphon.

2. A military force.

She to foreign realms
Sends forth her dreadful legions. Philips.

3. Any great number.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shakespeare.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY. adj. [from legion.]

1. Relating to a legion.

2. Containing a legion.

3. Containing a great indefinite number.

Too many applying themselves betwixt jest and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LEGISLATION. n. f. [from legislator, Latin.] The act of giving laws.

Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton.

LEGISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.]

Giving laws; lawgiving.

Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Dentham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLATOR. n. f. [legislator, Latin; legislateur, French.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.

He spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a
... animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLATURE. n. f. [from legislator, Latin.] The power that makes laws.

Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Dale's Com. Law.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Adelphon.

By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift.

LEGITIMACY. n. f. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfulness of birth.

In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.

The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward.

LEGITIMATE. adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, French.] Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.

Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shakespeare.
An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embrace, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Taylor.

TO LEGITIMATE. v. a. [legitimer, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.

Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe.

2. To make lawful.

It would be impossible for any enterprise to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Dunay of Piety.

LEGITIMATELY. adv. [from legitimate.]

1. Lawfully.

2. Genuinely.

By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat;
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

LEGITIMATION. n. f. [legitimation, Fr. from legitimate.]

1. Lawful birth.

I have disclaimed my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakespeare.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.

2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME. } n. f. [legume, Fr. legumen, LEGUMEN. } Lat.] Seeds not reaped,
but gathered by the hand; as, beans:
in general, all larger seeds; pulse.

Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbutnot.

LEGUMINOUS. adj. [legumineux, Fr. from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds, as oats, barley, and wheat: or of some of the fibroque or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbutnot.

LEISURABLE. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure; not hurried; enjoying leisure.

A relation inexcusable in his works of leisureable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.

LEISURABLY. adv. [from leisureable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.

Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisureably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

LEISURE. n. f. [loisir, French.]

1. Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.

A gentleman fell very sick; and a friend said to him, Send for a physician; but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can discompose your mind. Dryden.

2. Convenience of time.

We'll make our leisures to attend on yours. Shakespeare.
They

They summon'd up their aciny, stait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakespeare. King Lear.
O happy youth!

For whom thy fates reserve so fair a bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.
I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.

More than I have said, loving countrymen;
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakespeare's Richard III.
LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.

He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious.
Shakespeare.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, sired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisuredly march. Hayward.

The bridge is human life: upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of three score and ten intire arches. Addison.

LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.

The Belgian hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we pass,
Their numerous grofs might charge us one by
one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.

LEMAN. n. s. [Generally supposed to be laimant, the lover, French; but ima- gined by Junius, with almost equal pro- bability, to be derived from leef, Dutch, or leop, Saxon, beloved, and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the antient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hannmer.

Hold for my fake, and do him not to dye;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take.
Spenser.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shakespeare.

LEMMMA. n. s. [λέμμα, French.] A proposition previously assumed.

LEMON. n. s. [limon, French; limo- nium, low Lat.]

1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.

The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Abraham.
The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer.

Bear me, Pomona!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.

The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.

LEMONADE. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

Thou, and thy wife, and children, should walk in my garden, buy toys, and drink lemonade.
Arbush. J. Bull.

To LEND. v. a. preterite, and part. pass. lent. [lænan, Saxon; lenen, Dutch.]

1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.

In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heav'n.

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury,
nor lend him thy victuals for increase.
Shakespeare.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Dryden.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakespeare.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again. De. ay of Piety.

Painting and poetry are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office: one is called a dumb poetry, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden's Dufcino.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor. Dryden.

Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak. Addison.

Wilt lend a hand to clofe thy mistress' eyes.
A. Philips.

LENDER. n. s. [from lend]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answered some small matter, and the rest left to the lender, if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors
To call in money. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LENGTH. n. s. [from leng, Saxon]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length
one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty: it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overthrows;
Stretch'd at his length he spurns the swarthy ground.
Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay. Shakespeare.
To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free,
I left danger, tears, and foes, behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudib.
Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,
What fountains sustain'd, and on what shores been cast? Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths.
Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss.

With length of days, and every day like this. Dryd.
Such toil requir'd the Roman natic,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame. Dryden.
In length of time it will cover the whole plain,
and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Abben.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of science, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns
have advanced. Watts.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Læstus, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy gentleman's name, I will insert it at length in one of my papers.
Addison's Spectator.

8. Distance.

He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging. Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.

Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length unto that wherein now we stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straightened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that to it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hooker.

10. At LENGTH. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder. Dryden's King Arthur.

To LENGTHEN. v. a. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthened without rupture. Abraham.
Falling dews with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life.
Shakespeare.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine ini-quities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Dan.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity.
Atterbury's Sermon.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To LENGTHEN out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.
I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.
It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts
lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.

Still 'tis farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.]

According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LENIENT. adj. [leniens,

LEN

1. Affusive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this; it sticks to our last sand.

Pope.

2. With of.

Consolatories writ
With study'd argument, and much persuasion fought,
Lenient of grief and anxious thought.

Milton.

3. Laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibre, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood.

Arbutnot on Alim.

LENIENT. n. f. An emollient, or affuasive application.

I dressed it with lenients.

Wifeman's Surgery.

TO LENIFY. v. n. [lenifier, old French; lenio, Latin.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue.

Bacon.

All soft'ning simples, known of foreign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;
These first intus'd, to lenify the pain,
He tugs with pincers, but he tugs in vain.

Dryden.

LENITIVE. adj. [lenitif, French; lenio, Latin.] Affusive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive.

Bacon.

There is aliment lenitive expelling the fœces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils.

Arbutnot.

LENITIVE. n. f.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it would be brought to decreitory rigours.

South's Sermons.

LENITY. n. f. [lenitas, Latin.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
Of meer compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country.

Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

Lenity must gain

The mighty men, and please the discontent. Dan.
Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity be abated.

Hayward.

These jealousies

Have but one root, the old impris'd king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the raving crowd:
But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Ælop's dog, they leapt upon his back.

Dryden.

LENS. n. f. From resemblance to the seed of a lentil.

The matter fermenteth upon the old leaven, and becometh more acrid. Wise man's Surgery.
The pestilential levains conveyed in goods. Arbutnot.

LEV'ER. n. f. [levier, French.]

The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hypomochlion; only the center is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence comes the name lever. Harris.

Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? Shakespeare.

So draw with cords, and some the monster
With levers. Dryden.

In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight: which is always by so much lesser, as the disproportion betwixt the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy. Wilk. Math. Maguk.
Some hoisting levers, to the sheets prepa'd. Dryden.

LEV'ERET. n. f. [levret, French.] A young hare.

Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

The libard and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso resembled to a libard's skin, the distance of whole spots represent the disperseness of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brewster.

LIBEL. n. f. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory, every such libel here becomes panegyrick there. Decay of Piety.

Good heav'n! that sots and knaves should be so vain,
To wish their vile resemblance may remain!
And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

TO LIBEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation, written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.
Sweet scrawls to fly about the streets of Rome:
What's this but libelling against the senate? Shakspeare.

He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now gainst each great man. Donne.

TO LIBEL. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon.

Is the peerage of England dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what to pure which envious tongues will spare?

Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair. Pope.

LIBELLER. n. f. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Men of his way should be most liberal,
They're set here for example. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Nerds must the power
That make us, and for us this ample world,

Be infinitely good, and of his good

As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

The liberal are secure alone,

For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

4. It has of before the thing, and so before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essays.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of oblique terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY. n. f. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakspeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but cast away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Donham.

LIBERALLY. adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.
If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James, i. 5.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

LIBERTINE. n. f. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfined; one at liberty.

LIBERTY. n. f. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatned to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakspeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heavenly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhorst it
The son, who, on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue Rational liberty; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells.

Milton.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other.

Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty.

Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties.

Darwin.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority.

Locke.

LIBIDINOUS. adj. [libidinosus, Latin.]

Lewd; lustful.

None revolt from the faith; because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless.

Rushy.

LIBIDINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinous.]

Lewdly; lustfully.

LIBRAL. adj. [libralis, Lat.] Of a pound weight.

Dr. B.

LIBRARIAN. n. s. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds the waves; this must be understood of regular tides: There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians.

Brown.

LIBRARY. n. s. [librerie, French.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they ran his library to view,
And antique registers for to advise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An ancient book, hight Briton's monuments.

Fairy Queen.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read.

Dryden's Du Fresnoy.

TO LIBRATE. v. a. [libra, Latin.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION. n. s. [libratio, Latin; libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body.

Dryden's Du Fresnoy.

Their opinions still

In loose French'd, to trust the void

Trembling, refuse.

Thomson's Spring.

[In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of oscillation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that at full moon they see the opposite parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does.

Dr. Trev.

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis.

Grav.

LIBRATORY. adj. [from libra, Latin.]

Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome fowcat,
And clammy dew, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way.

Dryd. Vir.

LICEBANE. n. s. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LICENCE. n. s. [licentia, Latin; licence, French.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser, seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, pretailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief.

Shakspeare.

Taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

They baul for freedom in their senseless woods,
And still revolt when truth would let them free;

Shakspeare.

License they mean, when they cry liberty.

Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to license by too just a name.

Roscom.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself.

Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the Judas, xiv. 14.

I have seen abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation.

Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery.

Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself.

Shakspeare.

TO LICENCE. v. a. [licencier, French.]

1. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's Titans brow'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with them'd blasphemies.

Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shew'd, that when he list he could licensy his thoughts.

Watson.

LICENSER. n. s. [from licensy.] A grantor of permission; commonly a tool of power.

LICENTIASTE. n. s. [licentiatas, low Latin.]

1. A man who uses licence. Not in use.

The licentiatas somewhat licentious, but they should pre-empt poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly.

Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of licentiate of matter in this faculty.

Shakspeare.

TO LICENTiate. v. a. [licencier, Fr.]

To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the finding of generous inclinations, or the dissuading of any thing that is coarse.

L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS. adj. [licencieux, French; licentiosus, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swain capricious,
To all licentious lust, and 'gan exceed
The measure of her mean, and natural first need.

Fairy Queen.

How would it maul thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate?

Shakspeare.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course.

Roscom.

LICENTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.]

With too much liberty; without just restraint.

The licentiatas, somewhat licentious, will pardon themselves.

Camden's Remains.

LICENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from licentious.]

Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained.

Raleigh.

This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty.

Swift.

During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted.

Swift.

LICH. n. s. [licg, Saxon.] A dead carcass; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians.

Salve magna parvas. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICHOW. n. s. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

TO LICK. v. a. [liccan, Saxon; licken, Dutch.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.

Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs.

Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame.

Hudibras.

He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews.

Dryden.

I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste.

Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.

At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongues; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison.

Shakspeare.

3. To lick up. To devour.

Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licks up the grass.

Numbers.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
Think how posterity will treat thy name.

Pope.

LICK.

LICK, v. f. [from the verb.] A blow rough usage. A low word.

He turned upon me as round as a chafed bone, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH, n. f. [licetis, a glutin, licetious.] Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.

1. Nice in the choice of food.

Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gulf.

It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof woman-kind is so liquorish, is offered unto it. Sidney.

Stephen, fond boy, delighted, did not know that it was love that shin'd in shining gold; But lick'ng, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.

Certain rare manuscripts, fought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jostlers, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Watson.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save His body, destin'd to that living grave; The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn, And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.

Wouldst thou seek again to trap me here With lick'ish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS, n. f. [from lick'ish.] Niceness of palate.

LICORICE, n. f. [λίκωρίς, liquoricia.] Italian. A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Materia Medica.

LICTOR, n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakespeare.

Proconsuls to their provinces

Hasting, or on return, in robes of state,

Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Demetrius could feed his spleen, and shake

His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;

Though in his country, yet no lictors were,

Nor rods, nor ax, nor truncheon. Dryden's Farnaby.

LID, n. f. [lib, Saxon; led, German.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.

Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was first down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for eyes, with the veiled lid, Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakespeare.

Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Quintus.

That eye dropp'd a single drop, and that, As my mole's sanguine could speak,

When from its lid a pearly dew Ran tickling down her beautiful cheek. Prior.

The rod of Heracles To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix, And sleep departed bids to Sisy; That rod was just a type of Sisy, Which open'd Sisy's human lids, Could neither opium full as well, And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE, v. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber lies bread like a tooth. Shakespeare. All liquid things congealed by heat become yellow; as ice, wort, &c. Peasam on Distilling.

LIE, n. f. [lige, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.

Thou best, abhorred traitor; with my sword I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A lie is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lie. South.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can chafe an apparent evil. Dryden.

When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea; but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts's Logic.

2. A charge of falsehood: to give the lie, is a figurative phrase.

That he shall lie to heavy on my sword, That it shall render vengeance and revenge;

Till thou find the giver, and that his rest Is earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakespeare.

It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knows to be true.

Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with their tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.

The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply; The truth is aural, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

TO LIE, v. n. [leogan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, He lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare.

If a traitor lie unto his neighbor in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered.

Should I lie against my right? Yes, xxiv. 6.

2. To exhibit false representation.

Inform us, will the same for true? Or do the prints and papers lie? Swift.

TO LIE, v. n. pres. I lay; I have lain or lie. [legan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest; to press upon.

Death lay under him as a uniformly shew Upon the sweetest bow of all the field. Shakespeare.

Let Henry on him, catch for he told many a heavy truth on him. Epitaph on Parnassus.

3. To be reposed in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Job, xlv. 18.

It will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me for your burying place. Gen. xlv. 30.

4. To be in a state of deception.

How many good young fellows would you, their fathers lying to them as you at this time lie? Shakespeare.

My little daughter lies at the point of death; I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. Mart.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller, That by the moon's mistaken light did rise, Lay down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryden.

Forlorn he must, and persecuted lie; Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or reposit.

I have seen where copperas is made, great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou dost well, shalt thou not be accepted? And if thou dost not well, sin lieth at the door. Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated, with respect to something else.

Deserts, where there lay no way. Wisdan.

10. To lie, where there lay no way. Wisdan.

To those happy climes that lie, Where day never shuts his eye. Milton.

There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier's Essay.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undetermined confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

11. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Job, xlviii.

He that commits a sin shall find The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,

Though brutes or savages shall assert his cause. Greene.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Alfons.

12. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in humility; it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.

13. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.

14. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie fallow. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Harris.

15. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in there lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight. Locke.

16. To be in prison.

Yours imprisonment shall not be long; I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakespeare.

17. To be in a bad state.

Why wilt thou be pining and pinching yourself in such adornings, starving souls of life? L'Estrange's Fables.

The generality of mankind, in pecking at one another, all one by one they are all torn to pieces. L'Estrange's Fables.

Are the gods to do your destiny, and you lie bellowing with your finger in your mouth?

L'Estrange's Fables.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.
To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion.

Callir.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp fit of the stone for a week, receives from this fine sentence.

Tillotson.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should make a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct.

Addison's Freeholder.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be defrauded.

Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.
—It lies much in your holding up.

Shakespeare.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntmen.

Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies,
to preserve the lives of all men?

Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies.

Stillington on Idolatry.

Mars is the warrior's god; in him it lies
On whom he favours to confer the prize.

Dryden.

20. To be valid in a court of judicature;
as, an action lies against one.

21. To cost; as, it lies me in more money.

22. To LIE at. To importune; to tease.

23. To LIE by. To rest; to remain still.

Ev'ry thing that heard him play,

Ev'n the billows of the sea,

Hung their heads, and then lay by;

In sweet music is such art,

Killing care, and grief of heart,

Fall asleep, or hearing die. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

24. To LIE down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.

The leopard shall lie down with the kid.

Isaiah, xl. 6.

The needy shall lie down in safety. Isa. xiv. 30.

25. To LIE down. To sink into the grave.

His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job, xx. 15.

26. To LIE in. To be in childbed.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to lounge themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.

Spenser on Ireland.

You confine yourself most unreasonably. Corae;
you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shakespeare. Cor.

She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated.

Wife's Surgery.

The doctor had practised both by sea and land,
and therefore cured the green sickness and lings in.

Spectator.

When Morison design'd to lie privately in;
She chose with such prudence her pangs to conceal,
That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal.

Prior.

Hydrotical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in.

Attentive on Diet.

27. To LIE under. To be subject to; to oppressed by.

A generous person will lie under a great distress.

Swadrig's Sermons.

It is a mistake never ought to be imputed to Dryden, who suffered to noble a genius to

Pope.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily.

Shirburny.

28. To LIE upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.

These are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account whereof will be required at their hands.

Bacon.

It should lie upon him to make out how that ter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies.

Bentley's Sermon.

29. To LIE with. To converse in bed.

Pardon me, Bassanio,

For by this ring the lay with me. Shakespeare.

30. It may be objected of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or stedi-ness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.

LIEF. adj. [leop, Saxon; lief, Dutch.]

Dear; beloved. Obsolete.

My lieff and she thus beguiled had,
For he was dead, all flesh doth frailty breed.

Fairy Queen.

You, with the rest,

Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My lieff liege to be mine enemy. Shak. Hen. VI.

LIEF. adv. Willingly: now used only in familiar speech.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shak.

LIEGE. adj. [lige, Fr. ligio, Italian; li-gius, low Lat.]

1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject: whence liegeman for subject.

2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally risen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]

Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry as their king and liege lord? Spenser.

My lady liege, said he,

What all your sex desire is sovereignty. Dryden.

So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be styled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Gre. i. Cojm.

LIEGE. n. s. Sovereign; superior lord:
scarcely in use.

O pardon me, my liege; but for my tears
I had almost said this dear and deep rebuke. Shaksp.

The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt. Shaksp.

The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in consternation wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.

Phillips.

LIEGEMAN. n. s. [from liege and man.]
A subject: not in use.

This liegeman 'gan to war more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,

In his own kind, he 'gan himself unfold. Fairy Q.

Sith then the ancestors of those that now live, yielded themselves their subjects and liegemen, shall it not tie their children to the same subjection?

Spenser on Ireland.

Stand, ho! who is there?

—Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Dane.

Shakespeare.

LIEGER. n. s. [more proper legier, or ledger.] A resident ambassador.

His passions and his fears Lie lieger for you in his breast, and there Negotiate your affairs.

Denham's Sophy.

LIE, the participle of lie.

One of the people might lightly have swayed thy wife. Gen. xxi. 10.

LIEGE. n. s. [from liege.] Pertaining to a liege.

There are many medicinal preparations of iron,
but none equal to the tincture made without acids;
especially in obstructions, and to strengthen the tone of the parts; as in liegerick and other like cases. Greav's Museum.

LIENTERY. n. s. [from lior, leave, smooth, and lior, intestine, gut; liorteric, Fr.] A particular looseness, or diarrhoea, wherein the food passes so suddenly through the stomach and guts, as to be thrown out by stool with little or no alteration. Quincy.

LIER. n. s. [from to lie.] One that rests or lies down, or remains concealed.

There were liers in ambush against him behind the city. Jos. viii. 14.

LIEU. n. s. [French.] Place; room: it is only used with in; in lieu, instead.

God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best becometh him.

Hooker.

In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade. Addison's Freeholder.

LIEVE. adv. [See LIEF.] Willingly.

Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve
the town-crier had spoke my lines. Shakespeare.

Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as lieve hang as work. L'Estrange.

LIEUTENANCY. n. s. [lieutenancy, Fr.
from lieutenant.]

1. The office of a lieutenant.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieutenancy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft. Shakespeare.

2. The body of lieutenants.

The list of undisputed masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenancy of our metropolis.

Fulton on the Glaciers.

LIEUTENANT. n. s. [lieutenant,
French.]

1. A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Whither away so fast?

—No farther than the tower.

—We'll enter all together,

And in good time here the lieutenant comes.

Shakespeare.

I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.

Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Brinkell's Rights of Hobbes.

Send by our new lieutenant, who in Rome,
And since from me, has heard of your renown,
I come to offer peace. Phillips's Britain.

2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superior of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.

It were most that such captains only were employed as have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieutenants there. Spenser on Ireland.

According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship.

Warren.

The soul of Essex was made lieutenant-general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom, and the darling of the swordsmen. Clarendon. His lieutenant, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Bylander, Alcibiades was again banished. Swift.

Canst thou to many gallant soldiers see,
And captains and lieutenants fight for me? Gray.
LIEUTENANTSHIP. n. s. [from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.
LIFE. n. s. plural lives. [Latin, to live, Saxon.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an inanimate state.

On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawn
To wage against thy foes. Shakespeare. King Lear.

She shews a body rather than a life,
A statue than a breather. Shakespeare. Ant. and Chopat.
Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Leibniz.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for t'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
'To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more; and when it dawns we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chinknick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

Howe'er 'tis well that whil' mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

So peaceful shilt thou end thy blissful days,
And seal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life's devouring fire. Fairy Queen.

Their complot is to have my life:
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to Heaven. Milton.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Brown on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.
His gushing entrails smok'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might Be wrong; his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.

Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;

After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
Close'd their long glories with a sigh.
I'll teach my family to lead good lives. Page.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
So Remus and his brother god were bled. Dryden.

7. Continuance of our present state; as, half his life was spent in study.

Some have not any clear ideas all their lives. Locke.
Untam'd and fierce the tiger still remains,
And tires his life with biting on his chains. Prior.
The generalization of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison on Italy.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

That is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life. Bacon's Essays.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the same. Bacon.

He that would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this. Denham.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,
Where every figure to the life express'd
The godhead's power. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

He saw in order painted on the wall
The wars that fame around the world had blown,
All to the life, and every leader known. Dryden.

10. General state of man.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!
Unmindful of their Maker. Milton.

All that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Afham.

Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton's Paradise Lost.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword; whilst I see lives the gashes
Do better upon them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure, is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.

Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kiss'd Amphitruon's wife. Prior.

15. Animal; animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

16. System of animal nature.

Lives through all life. Pope.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LIFEBLOOD. n. s. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness does infect
The very lives of our nation. Shakespeare.
How could it then drain the lives of the state! Shakespeare.

His forehead struck the ground,
Life and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryden.

They lived with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lives. Spektor.

Money, the lives of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation
Its motion and its heat maintains. Swift.

LIFEVERLASTING. An herb. Ainsw.

LIFEGIVING. adj. [life and giving.]
Having the power to give life.

His own heat,
Kindled at first from heav'n's lives giving fire. Spenser.

He sat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that lives giving plant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

LIFEGUARD. n. s. [life and guard.]
The guard of a King's person.

LIFELESS. adj. [from life.]

1. Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lives on the bier. Prior.

2. Unanimated; void of life.

Was I to have never parted from thy side;
As good have grown these still a lifeless rib! Milton.
Thus began

Outrage from lifeless things. Milton.

The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless un-active heap of matter. Chrysostom.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.

Hopeless and helpless both Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end. Shakespeare.
Unknowing to command, proud to obey,
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Prior.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.

The other victor-flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood. Dryden.

LIFELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejune.

LIFE LIKE. adj. [life and like.] Like a living person.

Minerva, life-like, an embodied air
Impress'd the form of Iphigenia the fair. Pope.

LIFESTRING. n. s. [life and string.]
Nerve; strings imagined to convey life.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts
That still shall pant, and still shall exercise
The motion spirit and nature both impart. Daniel.

LIFETIME. n. s. [life and time.] Continuance or duration of life.

Jordan talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was. Addison on Medals.

LIFEWEARY. adj. [life and weary.]
Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have
A dram of poison, such soon speeding gear,
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the lives weary taker may fall dead. Shakespeare.

TO LIFT. v. a. [lyfta, Swedish; lyfta, Danish. I lifted, or lift; I have lifted, or lift.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave;
to elevate; to hold on high.

Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lifting food to't? Shakespeare's King Lear.

Your guests are coming;
Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Propp'd

Prop'd by the spring, it lifts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.
So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble to great load to lift. Pope.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter.

So weary bees in little cells repose,
But it night robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxy city grows. Dryden.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.
My heart was lift up in the ways of the Lord, 2 Chron.

Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
To bright Cæcilia greater pow'r is given,
His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,
Hers lift the soul to heav'n. Pope.

5. To raise in fortune.
The eye of the Lord lifted up his head from misery, Ecclesiast.

6. To raise in estimation.
Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocrypha, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lift up the writings of men above it. Hooker.

7. To exalt in dignity.
See to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man! Addison.

8. To elevate; to swell, as with pride.
Lifted up with pride. Tim. iii. 6.
Our successes have been great, and our hearts have been too much lifted up by them, so that we have reason to humble ourselves. Atterbury.

9. Up is sometimes emphatically added to lift.

He lift up his spear against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time. 2 Sam. xxiii. 3.
Arise, lift up the lad, and hold him in thine hand. Genesis.

To LIFT. v. n. To strive to raise by strength.

Pinch cattle of pasture while summer doth last,
And lift at their tails ere a winter be past. Tasso.
The mind, by being engaged in a task beyond its strength, like the body strained by lifting at a weight too heavy, has often its force broken. Locke.

LIFT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The manner of lifting.
In the lift of the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body beareth most upon the knees. Bacon.
In races, it is not the large stride, or high lift, that makes the speed. Bacon's Essays.

2. The act of lifting.
The goat gives us a lift, and out he springs. L'Estrange.

3. Effort; struggle. Dead lift is an effort to raise what with the whole force cannot be moved; and figuratively any state of impotence and inability.

Myself and Julia made a shift
To snip him out at a dead lift. Hudibras.
Mr. Doctor had puzzled his brains
In making a ballad, but as it stand,
And you freely must own, you were at a dead lift. Swift.

in. Shagbald, denotes a load or any thing; as also, if one be much with liquor, they say,
He got a great lift.

in Scotism. The say: for in a stony light they say, How clear the lift is!
Lifts of a sail are ropes to raise or lower them at pleasure.

PRK. n. f. [from lift.] One that lifts.

Thou, O Lord, art my glory, and the lift up of mine head. Psal. lvi. 4.

To LIG. v. n. [liggen, Dutch.] To lie.
Thou kept the great cure
I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts ligen in wait,
For to entrap in thy tender fate. Spenser's Faerie Queene.

LIGAMENT. n. f. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]

1. Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any sense, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint; their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sapdys.

The incus is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Holds.

2. [In popular or poetical language.]
Any thing which connects the parts of the body.

Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break. Dunbar.

3. Bond; chain; entanglement.
Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison's Spectator.

LIGAMENTAL. } adj. [from ligament.]
LIGAMENOUS. } Composing a ligament.

The urachus, or ligamental passage, is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its aliment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The clay clo is inserted into the fist bone of the sterion, and bound on by a strong ligamentous membrane. Wise man.

LIGATION. n. f. [ligatio, Latin.]

1. The act of binding.
2. The state of being bound.
The number of the body seems to be but the walking of the soul: it is the ligation of sense, but the liberty of reason. Addison.

LIGATURE. n. f. [ligature, French; li-gatura, Latin.]

1. Any thing tied round another; bandage.

He deludeth us also by philters, ligatures, charms, and many superstitious ways in the cure of illcalens. Bacon.

If you slit the artery, and thrust into it a pipe, and cast a strain ligature upon that part of the artery; notwithstanding the blood hath free passage through the pipe, yet will none the artery beat below the ligature; but do but take off the ligature, it will beat immediately. Ray on the Creation.

The many ligatures of our English dress, check the circulation of the blood. Scott.

I found my arms and legs very strongly fastened on each side to the ground; I likewise felt several tender ligatures across my body, from my arms to my thighs. Cuthbert's Travels.

2. The act of binding.
The sacral cord performed its office, and with most strict ligature squeezed the blood from this sac.

Any stoppage of the circulation will produce a dropy, as by strong ligature or compression.

Abraham on Dropsy.

3. The state of being bound. Not very proper.

Sand and gravel gravels easily admit of heat and moisture, for which they are not much the better, because they are too loose, and contract no ligature. Morimer's Husbandry.

LIGHT. n. f. [lepp, Saxon.]

1. That material medium of light; that body by which we see; luminous matter.

Light is propagated from luminous bodies in time, and spreads about seven or eight minutes of an hour in passing from the sun to the earth. Newton's Opticks.

2. State of the elements, in which things become visible; opposed to darkness.

God called the light day, and the darkness he called night. Genesis.

So arise thou driv'st away
Light and darkness, night and day. Carew.

3. Power of perceiving external objects by the eye; opposed to blindness.

My strength faileth me; as for the light of mine eyes, it also is gone from me. Psalms.

If it be true that light is in the soul,
She all in every part, why was the light
Ta such a slender ball as th' eye confin'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not as feeling through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through ev'ry pore? Milton.

4. Day.
The murderer rising with the light killeth the poor. Job.
Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
Out of his grave, fresh as the dawning light. Milton.

5. Life.
Infants that never saw light.
Swift roll the years, and rise the expected morn,
O spring to light, auspicious babe be born! Pope.

6. Artificial illumination.
Seven lamps shall give light. Numb.

7. Illumination of mind; instruction;
knowledge.
Of those things which are for direction of all the parts of our life needful, and not impossible to be attained by the light of nature itself, are there not many which far men's natural capacity hath been able to find out? Hooker.

Light may be taken from the experiment of the horle-tooth ring, how that those things which assuage the strife of the spirits, do help diseases contrary to the intention desired. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I will place within them as a guide
My unspire confidence, whom if they will hear,
Light after light will see as they shall attain,
And so the end persisting safe arrive. Milton.

I opened Aristotle in Italian, and the very full two lines gave me light to all I could desire. Dryd.

If internal light, or any proposition which we take for inspired, be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it. Locke.

The ordinary words of language, and our common pie of them, would have given us light into the nature of our ideas, if considered with attention. Locke.

The books of Varro concerning navigation are lost, which no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Abraham on Coins.

8. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.

Nearer admit the lights in the same picture; but the greater the light strikes forcibly on those pieces of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the surrounds. Dryden's Dunciad.

9. Reach of knowledge; mental view.

Lights

Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him.

Daniel, v. 11.

We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South Sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light.

Bacon's Natural History.

They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments.

10. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.

Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shows it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind.

South.

It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights.

Spectator.

An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion.

Addison.

11. Publick view; publick notice.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light? Heav'n! was I born for nothing but to write?

12. The publick.

Grave epistles bring vice to light, Such as a king might read, a bishop write.

13. Explanation.

I have endeavour'd, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before.

Hooker.

We should compare places of scripture treating of the same point; thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

14. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper; any luminous body.

That light you see is burning in my hall; How far that little candle throws his beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Shakespeare.

Then he called for a light, and sprang in and fell down before Paul.

Acts, xvi. 29.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth.

Acts, xiii. 47.

Let them be for signs,

For seasons, and for days, and circling years; And let them be for lights, as I ordain Their office in the firmament of heav'n, To give light on the earth.

Milton.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and a meteor.

Glanville.

Several lights will not be seen, If there be nothing else between; Men doubt, because they stand so thick in th' sky, If those be stars that paint the galaxy.

Cowley.

I will make some offers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which the ships may avoid at least known rocks.

Temple.

He must still mourn

The sun, and moon, and every starry light, Ellips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night.

Prior.

LIGHT. adj. [leopt, Saxon.]

1. Not tending to the center with great force; not heavy.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt, And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.

Dryden.

These weights did not exert their natural gravity till they were laid in the golden balance, inso-much that I could not guess which was light or heavy whilst I held them in my hand.

Addison.

2. Not burdensome; easy to be worn, or carried, or lifted; not onerous.

Horse, oxen, plough, tumbril, cart, waggon, and wain,

The lighter and stronger the greater thy pain.

Tupper.

It will be light, that you may bear it. Under a cloak that is of any length. A king that would not feel his crown too heavy, must wear it every day; but if he think it too light, he knoweth not of what metal it is made.

Bacon's Essays.

3. Not afflictive; easy to be endured.

Every light and common thing incident into any part of man's life.

Hooker.

Light fast rings give us leisure to complain, We groan, but cannot speak, in greater pain.

Dryden.

LIGHTNESS. n. s. [from light.]

1. Want of weight; absence of weight:
the contrary to heaviness.

Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine,
because of their length, straightness, and lightness.
Bacon's Natural History.

Suppose many degrees of littlecoats and lightness in particles, so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.

For, unto light there is no greater shame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love. Fairy Queen.

Of two things they must chuse one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had in so importunate manner desired, or else condescend unto that demand. Hooker.

As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greatest gust;
Such is the lightness of your common men. Shakespeare.

3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.

Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that embolden'd such base fancies towards me? Sidney.

That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness? Shakespeare.

4. Agility; nimbleness.

LIGHTNING. n. s. [from lighten, lighten-
ing, lightning.]

1. The flash that attends thunder.

Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Maschenbrock.

Some think the lightning born before the thunder;
What tells us then they both together are? Davies.

Salmons.

*Salmonus, suff'ring cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling sound
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightning, and their forked rays.* Dryd.
No warning of the approach of flame;
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd,
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.

2. Mitigation; abatement. [from to lighten, to make less heavy.]

How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind message from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Addison's Spectator.

LIGHTS. n. f. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint was chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no seat for any sharp disease.
Hayward.

LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure;
not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are light-some, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is affected and qualified. Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bacon.

Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Natural History.

His course exalted through the Ram had run,
Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love.
Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to ex-hilarate.

It suiteth so fitly with that light some affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name, that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension,
and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

LIGHTSOMENESS. n. f. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darkness.

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the light-someness of our air, and the twilight, are owing.
Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

LIGNA'LOES. n. f. [lignum aloes, Latin.]
Aloes wood.

The vellies spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lignaloës which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water.
Numb. xxiv. 6.

LIGNUMUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneus, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more lignous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself.
Bacon's Natural History.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covert, and the true body of each seed, the paren-thymous and lignous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grey.

LIGNUMVITÆ. n. f. [Latin.] Guiacum; a very hard wood.

LIGURE. n. f. A precious stone:

The third row a ligure, an agate, and an ame-he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose. Clarendon.

Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon.

If his rules of reason be not better suited to the mind than his rules for health are fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed.

Baker on Learning.

LIKE. n. f. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like for the like thing, or like person.]

1. Some person or thing resembling another.

He was a man, take him for all and all,
I shall not look upon his like again. Shakespeare.
Every like is not the same, O Cesar! Shakespeare.
Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like.

Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held engangled. Hayward.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more;
A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.

His desire

By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange.

She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more
To women than they had before;
This might their mutual fancy strike,
Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Used with bad; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just: perhaps bad is a corruption for was.

Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, bad like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.

LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as: it is not always easy to determine whether it be adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.
Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord
pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.

Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson.

What will be my confusion, when he sees me
Neglected, and forsaken like himself. Phillips.

They roar'd like lions caught in toils, and rag'd;
The man knew what they were, who heretofore
Had seen the like lie murder'd on the thore. Waller.

2. In such a manner as befits.

Be strong, and quit yourselves like men.

1 Sam. iv. 9.

3. Likely; probably. A popular use not analogical.

I like the work well, ere it be demanded,
As like enough it will, I'd have it copied. Shakespeare.

TO LIKE. v. a. [iccan, Saxon; liken, Dutch.]

1. To chuse with some degree of preference.

As nothing can be so reasonably spoken as 'to content all men, so this speech was not of them all liked. Kneller.

they liked him that did the evil. Sidney.

He grew content to mark their speeches, then to marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company. Sidney.

He proceeded from looking to liking, and from liking to loving. Sidney.

For several virtues

I have lik'd several women; never any
With so full soul. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand

Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

Scarce any man passeth to a liking of sin in others,
but by first practising it himself. South.

Beasts can like, but not distinguish too,
Nor their own liking by reflection know. Dryden.

3. To please; to be agreeable to. Now disused.

Well hoped he, ere long that hardy guest,
If ever covetous hand, or lustful eye,
Or lips he laid on thing that lik'd him best,
Should be his prey. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Say, my fair brother now, if this device
Do like you, or may you to like entice. Hubbard.

 By any likelihood he shew'd to-day.
 — That with no man here he is offended. Shakespeare.
2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
 The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
 Like to the senators of antique Rome,
 Go forth and fetch their conqu'ring Caesar in:
 As by a low, but loving likelihood,
 Were now the general of our gracious empress,
 As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
 How many would the peaceful city quit
 To welcome him? Shakespeare's Henry V.
 There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation.
Raleigh.

3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.
 As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there been more, it would by likelihood as well have noted many. Hooker.
 Many of likelihood informed me of this before, which hung so tottering in the balance, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt.

Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

It never yet d d hurt,

To lay down likelihood, and towns of hope. Shakespeare.
 As there is no likelihood that this place could be so altered, so there is no probability that these rivers were turned out of their courses.

Raleigh's History of the World.

Where things are least to be put to the venture, as the eternal interests of the other world ought to be, there every, even the least, probability, or like- lihood of danger, should be provided against. S. u. s.

There are predictions of our Saviour recorded by the evangelists, which were not completed till after their deaths, and had no likelihood of being so when they were pronounced by our blessed S. u. s.

Thus, in all likelihood, would it be with a libertine, who should have a visit from the other world:
 the first horror it raised would go off, as new divisions came on. Atterbury.

L I K E L Y . adj. [from like.]

1. Such as may be liked; such as may please. Obsolete.
 These young companions make themselves believe they love at the first looking of a likely beauty.

Sidney.

Sir John, they are your likeliest men; I would have you served with the best. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. Probable; such as may in reason be thought or believed; such as may be thought more reasonably than the contrary: as, a likely story, that is, a credible story.

L I K E L Y . adv. Probably; as may reasonably be thought

While man was innocent, he was likely ignorant of nothing that importuned him to know. Glennville.

T O L I K E N . v. a. [from like.] To represent as having resemblance; to compare.

The prince broke your head for likening him to a saging man of Windsor. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

For he, though with the tongue
 Of angels, relate? or to what things
 Liken on earth? conspicuous, that may lift
 Human imagination to such height
 Of God-like power? Milton's Paradise Lost.

L I K E N E S S . n. s. [from like.]

1. Resemblance; similitude.
 They all do live, and moved are
 To multiply the likeness of their kind. Spenser.
 A standstill is to make his author appear as as he can, provided he maintains his and makes him not unlike himself.
 Translation is a kind of drawing after the life, where there is a double sort of likeness, a good one and a bad one. Dryden.

There will be found a better likeness, and a worse;
 and the better is constantly to be chosen. Dryden.

2. Form; appearance.
 Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace; for trouble being gone, comfort should remain. Shakespeare.

It is safer to stand upon our guard against an enemy in the likeness of a friend, than to embrace any man for a friend in the likeness of an enemy.
L'Estrange.

3. One who resembles another; a copy; a counterpart.

Poor Cupid, sobbing, scarce could speak,

Indeed, mamma, I did not know ye;

Alas! how early my mistake!

I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.

L I K E W I S E . adv. [like and wise.] In like manner; also; moreover; too.

Jesus said unto them, I also will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I likewise will tell you by what authority I do these things. Matt. xxi. 24.

So was it in the decay of the Roman empire, and likewise in the empire of Almaigne, after Charles the Great, every bird taking a feather. Bacon.

Spirit of vitric acid to pure unmixed serum, coagulates as if it had been boiled. Spirit of sea-salt makes a perfect coagulation of the serum likewise, but with some different phenomena. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

L I K I N G . adj. [Perhaps because plumpness is agreeable to the sight.] Plump; in a state of plumpness.

I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink, for why should he see your faces worse liking, than the children which are of your sort? Dan. i. 10.

L I K I N G . n. s. [from like.]

1. Good state of body; plumpness.
 I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I'm in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. Shakespeare.
 Their young ones are in good liking; they grow up with corn. Job, xxxix. 4.
 Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness, and, being in good liking, were set on a stall, when exposed to sale, to shew the good habit of their body. Dryden's Notes to Persius.

2. State of mind.
 The liking that, like the lab'ring moon,
 By charm of art was hurried down;
 Forc'd with regret to leave her native sphere,
 Came but a while on liking here. Dryden.

3. Inclination.
 Why do you longer feed on loathed light,
 Or liking find to gaze on earthly mold? Fairy Qu.

L I K I N G . n. s. [from the verb.] Delight in; pleasure in; with so.

There are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet, but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring of the parts. Dryden.

L I L A C H . n. s. [lilac, lilas, French.] A tree.

The white thorn is in leaf, and the lilach tree.

Bacon.

L I L I E D . adj. [from lily.] Embellished with lilies.

Nymphs and shepherds dance no more

By sandy Laxion's lilied banks. Milton.

L I L Y . n. s. [lilium, Latin.]

There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and mar-tions of various sorts. Miller.

Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
 Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
 And make the filken strings delight to kiss them;
 He would not then have touch'd them for his life!
Shakespeare.

Shakespeare upon a landscape where no city!
 No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
 Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
 That answers mistrets of the field, and fourthly,
 I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakespeare.

Arms, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce.

Pasdam on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
 And if our pride will: our reason yield,
 It must by sure comparison be shown,
 That on the regal seat great David's son,
 Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior.
 For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

L I L Y - D A F F O D I L . n. s. [lilio-narcissus.]

A foreign flower.

L I L Y - H Y A C I N T H . n. s. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped like the flower of hyacinth; the roots are scaly, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.

L I L Y of the Valley, or May lily . n. s.
 [lilium convallium.]

The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods.
Miller.

Lily of the valley has a strong root that runs into the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Whitelivered; cowardly.

A base, lilylivered, action-taking knave.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

L I M A T U R E . n. s. [limatura, Latin.] Filings of any metal; the particles rubbed off by a file.

L I M B . n. s. [lim, Saxon and Scottish;
lem, Danish.]

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
 And large proportion of his strong-limbed.

Shakespeare.

O! that I had her here, to tear her limb meal!

Shakespeare.

Now am I come each limb to survey,
 If thy appearance answer loud report. Milton's Ag.

2. [Limbe, French; limbus, Lat.] An edge; a border. A philosophical word.

By moving the prisms about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at its outward limb the red and yellow. Newton.

T O L I M B . v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,
 They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
 Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare. Milton.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

L I M B E C K . n. s. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembeck.] A
 Her cheeks, on which this creamy nectar
 Still'd through the limbbeck of her diamond eyes.
Fairfax.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
 Whose countries limbbecks to our bodies be,
 Canst thou for gain bear? Donne.

Call up, unbound,
 In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
 Drain'd through a limbbeck to his naked form. Miln.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbbeck. Howel.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
 Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbbecks rise,
 It would in richer showers descend again. Dryden.

The warm limbeck drowns
Salubrious waters from the sacred brook. Pliny
LIMBED. adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years age, large limb'd, and fed,
To Jove's high altar Agamemnon laid. Pope's Iliad.
LIMBER. adj. Flexible; easily bent;
pliant; limbe.

You put me off with limber vows. Shakespeare.
I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the inadubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Watson.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm; those way'd their limber fans
For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride. Milton.
She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her.

More on Apeism.
The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.

LIMBERNESS. n. f. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

LIMBO. n. f. [Eo quod sit limbus infe-rorum. Du Cange.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
Oac whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.

Shakespeare.
Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shakespeare.
All these up-whirl'd aloft
Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudib.
Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden's Spenser's Tryer.

LIME. n. f. [lim, xelyman, Saxon, to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'lt never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose computed rhymes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.

Shakespeare.
Jollier of this state
Than are new-benefit'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, whereto he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.
A thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs.

L'Ffrange.
Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.

Dryden.
Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows hearts.

2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calc, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen praise'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold. Mortimer.

LIME. tree, or LINDEN. n. f. [Limb, Saxon; tilia, Latin.]

1. The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes testiculated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit. Milner.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.

2. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves;
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson's Summer.

TO LIME. v. a. [from lime.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

Oh bosom, black as death!
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Example, that so terribly shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth every bush,
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. To smear with lime

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shaksp.
Those twigs in time will come to be lim'd, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them.

L'Ffrange.
3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, manuring, and liming. Child.
All forts at pease love limed or marled land.

LIMEKILN. n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the seek of a lime-kiln. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
They were found in a lime kiln, and having passed the fire, each is a little vitrified. Woodward.

LIMESTONE. n. f. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands; must be of advantage. Mortimer.

LIME-WATER. n. f.

Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs. Hill.

He tried an experiment on wheat, infused in limewater alone, and some in brandy and lime-water mixed, and had from each grain great increase.

LIMIT. n. f. [limite, French; limites, Lat.] Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy. Exod. xlii. 12.

We went, great emperor, by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land;
To the place where no more world is found,
But foaming billows beating on the ground. Dryd.

TO LIMIT. v. a. [limiter, French; from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel. Psalms.

Thanks I must you con, that you
Are thieves profess; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch. Swift.

2. To refrain from a lax or general sig-nification: as, the universe is here limit- ed to this earth.

LIMITA'NEOUS. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds. Dictionary.

LIMITARY. adj. [from limit.] Placed at the boundaries as a guard or superia-tendant.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub! Milton's Paradise Lost.

LIMITATION. n. f. [limitation, French;
limitatio, Latin.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

Am I yourself?
But, as it were, in sort of limitation? Shakespeare.
I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir.
This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save chose the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; it be afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

LIMMER. n. f. A mongrel.

TO LIMN. v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw;
to paint any thing.

Mine eye doth his effigies witness,
Most truly limn'd, and living in your face. Shaksp.
Emblems limned in lively colours. Peacham.
How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limned in their unspotted bravery? Granville.

LIMNER. n. f. [corrupted from enlumi-neur, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind. Granville's Sappho.

Roots are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;
Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown.

And nature is their object to be drawn. Granville.

LIMOUS. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the

Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy feculent part of the blood. Floyer.

LIMP. adj. [limpio, Italian.]

1. Vapid; weak. Not in use.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp, and tasteless. Watson's Angler.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

To LIMP. v. n. [limpen, Saxon.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakespeare.

How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Shakespeare.

When Plutus, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot. Bacon.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word. Dryden.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight;
Or both in friendly comfort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind. Prior.

LIMPET. n. s. A kind of shell-fish. Ainsworth.

LIMPID. adj. [limpidus, French; limpidus, Latin.] Clear; pure; transparent.

The springs which were clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and impregnated with sulphur as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward.

The brook that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Gently diffus'd into a limpid plain. Thomson's Sum.

LIMPIDNESS. n. s. [from limpid.] Clearness; purity.

LIMPLY. adv. [from limp.] In a lame halting manner.

LIMY. adj. [from lime.]

1. Viscous; glutinous.

Striving more, the more in laces strong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his winged twain
In limy snarls the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. Containing lime.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned, or turned into a kind of leather. Grew's Museum.

To LIM. v. n. [abinnan, Saxon.] To yield; to give over.

Unto his foe he came,
Resolv'd in mind all suddenly to win,
Or soon to lose before he once would lin. Fairy Q.

tree. See LIME.

Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.
Two neighboring trees, with walls encompass'd
round,

One a hard oak, a softer linden one. Dryden.

LIME. n. s. [linea, Latin.]

Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must grade no more towards the sun; so that they would slve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tan-gents against other planets. Bentley.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings:
O for the then sole hope, and in design

Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line. Waller.

A line seldom holds to strain, or draws freight in length, above fifty or sixty feet. Moson.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whole paths shall be familiar as the land. Dryden.

4. The string that sustains the angler's hook.

Victorious with their lines and eyes,
They make the fishes and the men their prize. Waller.

5. Lineaments, or marks in the hand or face.

Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour
Which then he wore. Shakespeare.

I shall have good fortune; go to, here's a simple line of life; here's a small tittle of wives. Shakespeare.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystic figure, for hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune telling lines. Cleveland.

6. Delineation; sketch.

You have generous thoughts turned to such speculations: but this is not enough towards the raising such buildings as I have drawn you here the lines of, unless the direction of all affairs here were wholly in your hands. Temple.

The inventors meant to turn such qualifications into perious as were agreeable to his character, for whom the line was drawn. Pope.

7. Contour; outline.

Oh lasting as those colours may they shine,
Free as thy stroke, yet faultless as thy line! Pope.

8. As much as is written from one margin to the other; a verse.

In the preceding line, Ulysses speaks of Nausicaa, yet immediately changes the words into the masculine gender. Brown.

In moving lines these few epistles tell
What fate attends the nymph who loves too well. Garth.

9. Rank of soldiers.

The pers the broken foe's remotest lines.
Aldison.

10. Work thrown up; trench.

Now snatch an hour that favours thy designs,
Unite thy forces, and attack their lines. Dryden.

11. Method; disposition.

The heavens themselves, the planets, and this center,

Observe degree, priority, and place,
Infigure, course, proportion, season, form,
Office and custom, in all line of order. Shakespeare.

12. Extension; limit.

Eden stretch'd her line
From Auran eastward to the royal tow'ns
Of great Seleucia. Milton's Paradise Lost.

13. Equator; equinoctial circle.

When the sun below the line descends,
Then one long night continued darkness joins. Creech.

14. Progeny; family, ascending or descending.

He chid the sisters
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then prophet-like,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings. Shakespeare.
He sends you this most memorable line,
In ev'ry branch truly demonstrative,
Willing you overlook this pedigree. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Undaunted minds, that rul'd the rugged north.

Prior.

2. [Lice, French.] Inclosed ground in which tilts are run, and combats fought.

Till now alone the mighty nations wrave,
The rest, at gaze, without the lists did stand;
And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted

Joze,

Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Paris thy son, and Sparta's king advance,
In measur'd lists to toils the weighty lance;
And who his rival shall in arms subdue,

His be the Jaine, and his the treasure too. Pope.

3. Bound; limit.

The ocean, oversteering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes in a riotous head
O'er-hears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

She within lists my ranging mind hath brought,
That now beyond myself I will not go. Daniel.

4. [Ljrtan, Saxon.] Desire; willingness; choice.

Alas, she has no speech!

—Too much;
I find it still when I have list to sleep. Shakespeare.

Nothing of passion or peevishness, or list to contradict, shall have any bias on my judgment.

King Charles.

He saw false Reynard where he lay full low;
I need not swear he had no list to crows. Dryden.

5. [Licium, Latin; liste, French.] A strip of cloth.

A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue list.

Shakespeare.

Instead of a list of cotton, or the like filtre,

we made use of a siphon of glass.

Boyle.

A list the cobbler's temples ties,

To keep the hair out of his eyes. Swift.

6. A border.

They thought it better to let them stand as a list, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament.

Hooker.

To LIST. v. n. [ljrtan, Saxon.] To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.

To fight in field, or to defend this wall,
Point what you list, I nought refuse at all.

Fanny Queen.

Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good.

Hooker.

They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list.

Hooker.

Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgment they be mere fancies. Whigfists.

Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,

It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Shakespeare.

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may

Take their advantage when, and how, they list.

Daniel.

When they list, into the womb
That bled them they return; and howl, and gnaw
My bowels, their repast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]

1. To enlist; to enrol or register.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewell not only to the pleasure, but also to the hopes of this life.

South.

They list with women each degen'rate name
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden.

2. To retain and enrol soldiers; to enlist.

The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like.

Claudian.

The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars.

Temple.

Two hundred horse he had command;
Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band;
There in my name are listed.

Dryden.

3. [From list; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.

How darest you pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight your cause?

Unask'd the royal grant. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

4. [From list, a shred or border.] To sew together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.

Some may wonder at such an accumulation of beauties, like a kind of embroidery or listing of one colour upon another. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to; to listen; to attend.

Then wail, what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs;
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity. Shakspeare. Hamlet.
I, this sound I better know: Ben Jonson.
Lift! I would I could hear mo.

L I S T E N . adj. Stippled; particoloured in long streaks.

Over his head beholds
A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
Conspicuous, with three listal colours gay, Betok'ning peace from God, and covenant new. Milton.

As the show'ry arch
With listal colours gay, or, azure, gules, Delights and puzzles the beholder's eyes. Philips.
To L I S T E N . v. a. To hear; to attend.
Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say. Shakspeare.
One cried, God bless us! and, amen! the other:
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear I could not say, amen! Shak.
He, that no more must say, is listened more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose. Shakspeare.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance,
At which I ceas'd and listen'd them a while. Milton.

To L I S T E N . v. n. To hearken; to give attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news. Shakspeare.

Antigonus used often to go disguised, and listen at the tents of his soldiers; and at a time heard some that spoke very ill of him: whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Listen, O Israel, unto me, and hearken, ye people. Isaiah, xlix.

When we have occasion to listen, and give a more particular attention to some sound, the tympanum is drawn to a more than ordinary tension. Holder.

On the green bank I sat, and listen'd long;
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.

He shall be receiv'd with more regard,
And listen'd to, than modest truth is heard. Dryd.

To this humour most of our late comedies owe their success: the audience listens after nothing else. Addison.

L I S T N E R . n. s. [from listen.] One that hearkens; a hearkener.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news. Howel.

Listeners never hear well of themselves. L'Estrange.
If she constantly attends the tea, and be a good listener, she may make a tolerable figure, which will serve to draw in the young chaplain. Swift.

The hush word, when spoke by any brother in a lodge, was a warning to the rest to have a care of listeners. Swift.

L I S T E N . adj. [from list.] Without inclination; without any determination to one thing more than another.

Intemperance and sensuality clog men's spirits, make them gross, listless, and unactive. Tillotson.
If you are to wheat alone extend,
Let Maja with her sisters first descend,
Before you set in earth your future hope,
On else expect a listless, laxy crop. Dryden's Virgil.

Lazy lolling sort
Of ever listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no fruit. Pope.

I was listless and desponding. Gulliver's Travels.

Careless; heedless; with of.

The sick for air before the portal gape,
Or idle in their empty hives remain,
With cold, and listless of their gains. Dryden.

L I S T L E S S L Y . adv. [from listless.] Without thought; without attention.

To know this perfectly, watch him at play, and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke.

L I S T L E S S N E S S . n. s. [from listless.] Inattention; want of desire.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed by listlessness or sorrow. Taylor.

L I T . the preterite of light; whether to light signifies to happen, or to set on fire, or guide with light.

Believe thyself, thy eyes,
That first inflam'd, and lit me to thy love,
Those stars, that still must guide me to my joy. Southerne.

I lit my pipe with the paper. Addison's Spectator.

L I T A N Y . n. s. [ἀιτία; litanic, French.] A form of supplicatory prayer.

Supplications, with solemnity for the appeasing of God's wrath, were, of the Greek church, termed litanies, and rogations of the Latin. Hooker.

Recollect your sins that you have done that week, and all your lifetime; and recite humbly and devoutly some penitential litanies. Taylor.

L I T E R A L . adj. [literal, French; litera, Latin.]

1. According to the primitive meaning; not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers,
we see that the words which were, do continue;
the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building; nor figurative, but what is founded in that,
and deduced from thence. Hammond.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for publick audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrases, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker.

3. Consisting of letters: as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

L I T E R A L . n. s. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown.

L I T E R A T T Y . n. s. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropo-logies, and are hot sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

L I T E R A L L Y . adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.

2. With close adherence to words; word by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.

L I T E R A R Y . adj. [literarius, Latin.] Respecting letters; regarding learning. Literary history, is an account of the state of learning, and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation, is talk about questions of learning. Literary is not properly used of mistive letters. It may be said, this epistolary correspondence was political officer than literary.

L I T E R A T I . n. s. [Italian.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitudes. Spectator.

L I T E R A T U R E . n. s. [literatura, Latin.]

Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if perfectment attend deservess, there will not want supplies. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison's Freeholder.

L I T H A R G E . n. s. [litharge, Fr. lithargy-rum, Lat.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver.
It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill.

I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or silver. Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.

L I T H E . adj. [lithe, Saxon.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.

Th' unwieldy elephant,
To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd
His lithe proboscis. Milton's Paradise Lost.

L I T H E N E S S . n. s. [from lithe.] Limberness; flexibility.

L I T H E R . adj. [from lithe.] Soft; pliant.

Thou antick death,
Two Talbots winged through the ether sky,
In thy despite shall scape mortality. Shakspeare.

2. [Lyden, Saxon.] Bad; sorry; corrupt.
It is in the work of Robert of Gloucester written lither.

L I T H O G R A P H Y . n. s. [λίθος and γραφή.]
The art or practice of engraving upon stones.

L I T H O M A N C Y . n. s. [λίθος and μανία.]

stone.

L I T I G A N T . n. s. [litigant, Latin; litigant, French.] One engaged in a suit of law.

The cast litigant fits not down with one word very apt, but recommends the suit. Drayton's Polygraph.
The litigant bear one another in pieces for the benefit of some third interest. Drayton's Polygraph.
LITIGANT, v. Engaged in a judicial contest.

Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Drayton's Polygraph.

TO LITIGATE, v. a. [litigo, Latin.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process.

TO LITIGATE, v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Drayton's Polygraph.

LITIGATION, n. s. [litigatio, Latin, from litigare.] Judicial contest; suit of law.

Never one clergyman had experience of both litigation, that hath not confessed, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clarendon.

LITIGIOUS, adj. [litigieux, French.]

1. Inclined to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.

Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find but still litigious men, who quarrels move. Donne.
His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing positive or litigious. Addison.

2. Disputable; controvertible.

In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Houker.

No fences parted fields, nor marks, nor bounds, Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds. Dryden's Georg.

LITIGIOUSLY, adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.

The drowsy frightened steeds,
That draw the litter of close curtain'd sleep. Milton.

Here modest matrons in soft litters driv'n,
In solemn pomp appear. Dryden's Æneid.
Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promiser's door. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. The straw laid under animals, or on plants.

To crouch in litters of your stable planks.
Take off the litter from your kernel beds. Evlyn.
Their litter is not toss'd by fows unclean. Dryden's Virgil.

3. A brood of young.

I do here walk before thee like a sow that hath overwhelmed all her litter, but one. Shakespeare.
Reflect upon that numerous litter of strange, senseless opinions, that crawl about the world. South.

A wolf came to a sow, and very kindly offered to take care of her litter. L'Estrange.
Full many a year his hateful head had been
For tribute paid, nor since in Cambria seen:
The last of all the litter (said by chance)
And from Geneva first infected France. Dryden.

4. A birth of animals.

Fruitful as the sow that carry'd
The thirty pig at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

5. Any number of things thrown hither and thither.

it is so in itself. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

4. Not much; not many.

He must be loosed a little season. Revelations.
A little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; so shall poverty come upon thee. Proverbs.

And now in little space
The confines met. Milton.

By sad experiment I know
How little weight my words with thee can find. Milton.
A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Syrian spring. Pope.

5. Some; not none: in this sense it always stands between the article and the noun.

I leave him to reconcile these contradictions, which may plentifully be found in him, by any one who will but read with a little attention. Lactantius.

LITTLE, n. s.

1. A small space.

Much in little was writ, and all convey'd
With cautious care, for fear to be betray'd. Dryden.

2. A small part; a small proportion.

He that despiseth little things, shall perish by little and little. Matthew.

Where there is too great a thinness in the fluid, subacid substances are proper, though they are a little astringent. Abbott.

4. Not much.

The tongue of the just is as choice silver; the heart of the wicked is little worth. Prov. xi. 20.
Finding him little studious, she chose rather to engage him with conversative qualities of youth; as, dancing and fencing. Wotton.

That poem was insamously bad; this parallel is little better. Dryden's Dunciad.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

LITTLENESS, n. s. [from little.]

1. Smallness of bulk.

Alluding, by a love of littleness,
To make abridgements, and to draw to less
Even that nothing which at first we were. Donne.
We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air. Burnet.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur.

The English and French, in verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pomp-ousness of the whole phrase, to wear off any little-ness that appears in the particular parts. Addison.

3. Want of dignity.

The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as if it was always displayed. Collier.

LITTORAL, adj. [littoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the shore.

LITURGY, n. s. [liturgia; liturgie, Fr.]

Form of prayers; formulary of publick devotions.

We dare not admit any such form of liturgy, as either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little to be read in the church. Hakewill.

The blessed of mortal wights began to be importuned, so that a great part of divine liturgy was address'd solely to her. Hemans.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

TO LIVE, v. n. [lyman, lyrgan, Saxon.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

It's night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living day should kiss it! Shakespeare's Macb.
To save the living, and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led.
Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits, good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Ecclesi., xli. 1.
Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Heyward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, to they be not wilfully lived and died in. Hammond.
A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religious to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope, and the whole consistory. Aurbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison's Spectator.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakespeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shakespeare.
The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on the Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.
Now three and thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.
Live while you live, the picture would say,
And snatch the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies:
Lord, in my views let both united be,
I live to pleasure when I live to thee. Doddridge.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.
He died for us, that when we wake or sleep,
We should live together with him. 1 Thess. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burner.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected might involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Most evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We want in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Sound which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short moment; but that which strikes the eye
Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with many arms and trophies grace,
There high in air, memorial of my name,
Fit the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.
To converse; to cohabit: followed by Shepherd swains shall dance and sing,

At each May morning.

If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed.

Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkaliescent than those that live upon vegetables. Arbuthnot.

10. To maintain one's self; to be supported.

A most notorious thief; lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Speiser.

They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.

His goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Knelius.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Templ.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Templ.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.

In a spacious cave of living stone,
The tyrant lives from his airy throne,
With power imperial curls the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Olive after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.

Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.
LIVE. adj. [from alive.]

1. Quick; not dead.

If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exodus.

2. Active; not extinguished.

A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halituous flames of the sulphure upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LIVELESS. adj. [from live.] Wanting life; rather, lifeless.

Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life to live left as it shews itself. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

LIVE. n. f. [It appears to me corrupt from liveless.] Support of life; maintenance; means of living.

Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel star,
And in dead parents' baleful ashes bred;
Full little wend'st thou what sorrows are Left thee for portion of thy liveless! Fairfax.
That rebellion drove the lady from thence, to find a liveless out of her own estate. Clarendon.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a liveless in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and liveless to get their living by practices for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a liveless where they can find it. Addison's Spectator.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest liveless: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison.

LIVELINESS. n. f. [from live.]

1. Appearance of life.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and to make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke.

LIVELONG. n. f. [live and long, from live; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.

She gave like blessing to each creature,
As well of worldly livelihood as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife. Hubbard.

LIVELONG. adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Y'er infants in your arms, and there have sat
The livelong day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The obscure'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.

Young and old come forth to play
On a sun-shine holiday,
Till the livelong day-light fail, Milt. n.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.

How could she sit the livelong day,
Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Not used.

Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY. adj. [live and like.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.

Put wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton.

2. Gay; airy.

Dulness, delighted, ey'd the lively dunce,
Remembering the herself was Pertness once. Pope.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. Strong; energetic.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred-up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense, and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton's Opticks.

Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Aurbury.

1. Briskly; vigorously.

They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.

That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden.

LIVER. n. f. [from live.]

1. One who lives.

Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.

The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond's Fundamentals.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of staid wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Aurbury.

3. [From life, Saxon.] One of the entrails.

With

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying graces.

Shakespeare.

Reason and respect

Make livers pale, and larkhood dejected.

LIVERCOLOUR. adj. [liver and colour.]

Dark red.

The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, liver-colour.

Woodward.

LIVERGROWN. adj. [liver and grown.]

Having a great liver.

I enquired what other casualties were most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest.

Graunt.

LIVERWORT. n. f. [liver and wort;
lichen] A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grife is short, on de-civities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour, but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

Mills.

LIVERY. n. f. [from liver, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully seize Heisterd's right;
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage.

Shakespeare.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment.

King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat, as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of living or di- living—for their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant house meat, like as by the coigny is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coignies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the lith, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the lith to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what virtually they list, for of virtu is they were wont to make a small reckoning.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. The cloaths given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears.

Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats affordeth.

Hucker.

I think, it is our way,

If we will keep in favour with the king,

To be her men, and wear her livery.

Shakespeare.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery.

That too I by our faces.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

Every body cloth'd in white.

And crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,

Are servants to the least, by livery known

Of innocence.

Dryden's Iliad and Leaf.

On others interest her gay livery flings,

Interest that waves on party-colour'd wings;

Turn'd to the sun she calls a thousand dyes,

And as she turns she colours fall or rise.

Dunin.

If your dinner miscarries, you were fixed by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liveries.

Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green

Prosody bedeck'd in April's livery.

Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion,

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour and near bred.

Shakespeare.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,

Infect, or worm: those way'd their lumber fans

For wings, and smallest linaments exact,

In all the flower deck'd of summer's pride,

With spots of gold and purple, azure, green.

Milton.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

Had in her sober livery all things clad.

Milton.

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath; that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistress.

Arbutnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVERS. n. f. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,

In a farm house or field, to have three livers.

Donne.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide,

French.] Discoloured, as with a blow;

black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted.

Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss;

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss!

Dryden.

They beat their breasts with many a braiding blow,

Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow.

Dryden.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividité, French; from livid.] Discoloration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance.

Arbutnot.

LIVING. participial adj.

1. Vigorous; active: as, a living faith.

2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action: as,

the living green, the living springs.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place,

having no succour but in their hands; the Helots,

a. in their own place, fighting for their livings,

wives, and children.

Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but the

of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her

living.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other in some cases.

L. Elfrange.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make.

Hubbard.

Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Shakespeare.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,

Or shortly you'll dig for your living.

Dunham.

Actions must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scabbler may get their living.

Dryden's Duf.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests.

Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs. Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using perfunctory reflections.

Arbutnot.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead,
who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vi-tiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine.

Arbutnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Pelmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alkaline form.

Boyle.

LIXIVIATE. adj. [lixivieux, French;

from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated sobriety, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

Bacon.

Lixivate salts, to which put-ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, uphoise them to put readily with their tincture.

Boyle.

LIXIVIUM. n. f. [Latin] Lye; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants.

Boyle.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizard, French; lucertus,
Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Asia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten in Arabia and Judaea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures.

Calmex.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the deities to be avoided,
As venomous toads, or lizards, detestful things.

Shakespeare.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owl's wing.

Shakespeare's Mac.

LIZARDITAL. n. f. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.]

A kind of stone.

L. L. D. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo. interj. [la, Saxon.] Look; see;

behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard,

but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies.

Shakespeare.

Now must the world point at poor Catherine,

And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife.

Shakespeare.

Lo! I have a weapon,

A better never did itself sustain

Upon a soldier's thigh.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou did'st utter,

I am yours for ever.

—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose

Shakespeare.

twice.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth.

Johnson.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine

To blast our bold design.

Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or tills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the thickest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of watties like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots: his mouth, barrel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gessner, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel.

Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. f. [plade, Saxon.]

. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Fair plant with flint larchard d,

Deigns none to e it thy load, and taste thy sweet?

Milton.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,

And sought his wonted shelter. Dryd. Nan's Tale.

Let Incha boast her groves, nor envy we

The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;

While by our oaks the precious loads are born,

And realms commanded which these trees adorn.

Pope.

. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.

Jove lighten'd of its load

Th' enormous mass, the labour of a God. Pope.

. Weight, or violence of blows.

Like lion mov'd they laid on load,

And made a cruel fight. Chaucer's Chaucer.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel

From my prevailing arm. Milton.

And Meneheus laid had load upon his helm.

Dryden.

. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray.

. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. J. J.

The thund'ring god,

Er'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryden.

LOAD. v. a. [preterite, loaded; past participle, laden. pladan, Saxon.]

. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,

Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakespeare.

Your carriage were heavy laden; they are a burden to the beast.

. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he read only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others.

Locke.

. To charge a gun.

A miner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder was fired. W. J. M.

. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy disadvised vow, laden with death, still found.

In my Ruin's ears. Adams's Cato.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly load, as it was anciently written; from laden, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strata amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load sprang out his branches, until they approach the open air.

Curwen's Journey of C. Smith.

Thine ever fit working in the lead mine, is to follow the lead as the lead mine follows the lead.

LOADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LOADEMAN. n. f. [lade and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LODESTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Maundeville, ledestar, from laden, to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure; the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; The overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life! Spenser.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!

More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear

When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear.

Shakespeare.

That clear majesty

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes. Davies.

LOANSTONE. n. f. [properly lodestone or lading stone. See LOANSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The lodestone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey whose fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hall's Mineralogy.

The use of the lodestone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Swift.

LOAF. n. f. [from play or lay, Saxon.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Eatly is it.

Of a cut loaf to steal a shive we know. Shakespeare.

The bread corn in the town suffered not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proposition; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may but it with a piece of loaf to get in each bottle.

Mortimer.

LOAM. n. f. [lim, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious earth. Lat.

Loam is the soil, that away, Shakespeare.

With lofty eyes, half loath to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wife,
No other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of princely worth. Fairy Queen.

When he heard her answers hith, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distress. Fairy Q.

To speak so indifferently, I am loth;

I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,

That is your part. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,

From whose soft side the first did issue make;

She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,

Her flow'ry banes unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth

To leave this paradise, but shalt possess

A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton.

To pardon willing, and to punish hith;

You strike with one hand, but you heal with both;

Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve

You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Athens is forced to kill Laisus, the poet shows him compassionate, and is loth to destroy such a miser piece of nature. Dryden.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,

First views the torrent he would venture o'er:

And then his inn on the farther ground,

Loth to wade through, and loth to go round:

The dipping in his staff does trial make

How deep the water is, he feels, and pulls it back. Dry.

I know you fly to be loth,

And still more loth to be oblig'd by me. Scutlorn.

LOATH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and misliking, loving and hating. Sidney.

They with their filthiness

Polluted this same gentle soil long time,

That their own mother loath'd their filthiness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,

Not to reveal the secret which I loath! Waller.

For then the lion loath'd the taste of blood,

And roaring hunts his female through the wood.

The loathsome honey

Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste corrupts the appetite. Shakespeare.

LOATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsome.] Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them, and so kept himself alive with the odour till a rest was past. Bacon.

LOB. n. f.

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.

Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakespeare.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.
Crowd, whom in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.

opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with vengeance,
Rain sacrificial whips rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakespeare's Tim. of Alb.
Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Wotton.

Try your backstairs, and let the lobby wait.

A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LOBE. n. f. [lobe, French; λόβος.] A division; a distinct part: used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal. Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Arbutnot on Elements.

From whence the quick repeccating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Swett.

LOBSTER. n. f. [lobster, Saxon] A crustaceous fish.

Those that call their shell, are still lobster, the crab, and craw fish. Bacon's Natural History.

It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Bruce.

LOCAL. adj. [loal, French; locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the local position of glory, and that to the use of all that are here, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the venturous goddess tries,
Leaving material world, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the true thing would be worshipped, leaving that circumstance changed. Smiling Jew.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their flight.

As of a death, or of the local wound
Of head or heart. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How is the change of being from one local being another, then, made by the action in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Dewey's Phil.

LOCALITY. n. f. [from local.] Existence in place, relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and body are devoid of quantity and dimensions, and that they have nothing to do with locality, is a generally opinioned. Coler.

LOCALITY. adv. [from local.] With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures, be diverse in body and spirit, which admit of nothing common to them, are not essentially divided, though not distant, I leave to the reader. Calanville.

LOCATION. n. f. [locatio, Latin.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not locality. Lucke.

LOCH. n. f. A lake. Scottish.

A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle.

Cheyne's Phil. f. Principles.

LOCK. n. f. [loc, Saxon, in both senses.]

1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.

No gate is strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or brast. Pearly Queen.

We have locks, to safeguard nice Tares,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shakespeare.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards. Mason.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock,
another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Grew.

3. A hug; a grapple.

They must be practised in all the locks and grips of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tug or grapple, and to close. Milton on Education.

4. Any inclosure.

Seagulls, eager with his beak to press
Betwixt the rival gally and the rock,
Shut up the unwieldy cantain in the lock. Dryden.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.

Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Spenser.

A goodly priest, who bowing her fan head over the water, it seemeth she looked into it, and dished her green locks by that running river. Sidney.

His gray locks, long grown and unbound,
Dishevelled hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.
The bottom was lit against a lock of wool, and the sound was quite dead. Bacon.

They mouth only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads. Sandys's Travels.

A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.

Grew.

Behold the locks that are grown white
Beneath a helmet in your father's battles. Addison.

Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well combin'd to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck. Pope.

daisies, or smiling to a lock of hay. Addison.

TO LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The golden locks on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking every door,
Thought all secure. Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am locked in one of them;
If you deliver me, you will find me out. Shakespeare.

We do lock

Our former temple in our strong-barr'd gates. Shakespeare.

Then lock to know those things which make us best,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast. Dante.

The flighted dancie

The log in secret locks. Dryden's Ovid.

If the door to a council be kept by armed men,
and all such whole opinions are not liked kept out,
the freedom of choice within is intangled, and all then acts are as void as if they were locked in. Dryden.

One conducts to the poet's completing of his work, the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle.

Dryden's Dedication to the Fœd.

The father of the gods
Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
And lock'd them safe within, oppos'd with mountain loads. Dryden's Fœd.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less? Lucke.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them. Swift.

Your wine lock'd up,
Plain milk will do the feat. Pope's Horace.

3. To close fast

Death lock'd his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes.

G.

LOCK. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.

For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
Doubly disputed it did lock and close,
That when it locked, none might through it pass.
Fairy Queen.

2. To unite by mutual insertion.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface, as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere.
Boyle.

LOCKER. n. f. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.

I made lockers of drawers at the end of the boat.
Robinson Crusoe.

LOCOMOTION. n. f. [locus and motus, Lat.]
Power of changing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet.
Brown's Vulgar Err.

LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [locus and moveo, Lat.]
Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals.
Derham's Physico Theology

In the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his locomotive tricks.
Pope.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks.
Abulnot in A. R.

LOCUST. n. f. [locusta, Latin.] A devouring insect.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Aethiopia, and many places of Asia, that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with. Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries. Catlett.
Tomorrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast.
Exodus.

An reptile with the streams of animals rotting, has produced pestilential locusts, such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts.
Abulnot in A. R.

LOCUST-TREE. n. f.

The locust tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an uncapable hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a stinging stringy substance.
Millett.

LODESTAR. See LOADSTAR.

LODESTONE. See LOADSTONE.

LODGE. v. a. [logian, Saxon; loger, French]

1. To place; a temporary habitation.

When he was come to the court of France, the king asked him by the name of the duke of York;
lodged him, and accommodated him in great state.
Bacon's Henry VII.

To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.

My house was proud to lodge a knight. Dryd.
To place; to plant.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
glut to have lodge'd my spear,

The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock.
Orway.

He lodge'd an arrow in a tender breast,
That had so often to his own been prest. Addis.
In viewing again the ideas that are lodged in the memory, the mind is more than passive. Locke.

4. To fix; to settle.

Fy whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose pow' I will might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd. Shakespeare.

I can give no reason,
More than a lodge'd hate, and a certain loathing!
I bear Antonio. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

5. To place in the memory.

This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodge'd it, and noted it in some particulars. Bacon's Henry VII.

6. To harbour or cover.

The deer is lodge'd, I've track'd her to her covert,
Rush in at once. Addison's Cato.

7. To afford place to.

The memory can lodge a greater store of images,
than all the senses can present at one time.
Chapman's Phil. Prim. of Lat.

8. To lay flat

Though blood and corn be lodge'd, and trees blown
down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads.
Shakespeare.

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a death in this revolting land. Shakespeare.

TO LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.

Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care dwells, sleep will never lie. Shakespeare.
Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air
To testify his hidden residence. Milton.
And dwell such rage in forest bosoms then?
And lodge such daring souls in little men? Pope.

2. To take a temporary habitation.

Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field? Shakespeare.
I know not where he lodges, and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare.
I am a man of war, and will not lodge with a woman. Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.

My lords
And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.
Shakespeare.

Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people!
Jeremiah.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way.
Taylor.

4. To lay flat.

Long corn wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for tank clays, and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildewed. Motim's Hylb.

LONGE. n. f. [logis, French.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.

He broke up his court, and retired himself, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he call'd his desert, wherein he had built two free lodges. Sidney.

I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a wa-
ren. Shakespeare.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chafe. Shakespeare.
Thou art a heavy lodge arriv'd, both stood,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ador'd
The God that sits both sky, air, earth. Milton.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descend-upon a low spout family. Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater:
as, the potter's lodge.

LODGEMENT. n. f. [from lodge; logement, French.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.

The curious lodgement and inoculation of the auditory nerves. Derham.

2. Accumulation; collection.

An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter. Storpe's Surgery.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.

The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other. Addison.

LODGER. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.

Bafe tyke, call'st thou me host? now, I scorn
the term; nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakespeare.
There were in a family, the man and his wife,
three children, and three servants or lodgers.
Grant's Bulls.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and noisy families. Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad. Taylor.

Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds, one shilling and sixpence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Abulnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty dear;
Say, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.

LODGING. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.

At night he came
To his known lodgings, and his country dame.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend. Addison's Guardian.
With take lodgings in the found of Bow. Pope.

2. Place of residence.

Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
The nest of love, the lodge of delight,
The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright.
Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.

The bounds were uncoupled; and the flag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.
Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray on Creation.

LOFT. n. f. [loft, Welsh; or from list.]

1. A floor.

Eutychus fell down from the third loft. Acts.
There is a traverse placed in a loft above. Bacon.

2. The highest floor.

To tell him in his slumber soft,
A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
And ever dizzling rain upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring wind. Fairy Queen.

3. Rooms on high.

Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder. Milton.
A weasel once made shift to sink
In at a corn loft, through a chink. Pope.

LOFTILY. adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.

2. Proudly; haughtily.

They speak wickedly concerning oppression;
they speak loftily. Psal. lxxiii. 8.

With

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.

My lowly verse may loftily arise,
And lift itself unto the highest skies. Fairy Queen.

LOFTINESS. n. f. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.

Three poets in three distant ages born;
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.

Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.

LOFTY. adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.

Cities of men with lofty gates and towers. Milton.
See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding forests on the mountains dance. Pope.

2. Elevated in condition or character.

Thus saith the high and lofty One. Isaiah.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled. Isaiah.
Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that fought him, sweet as summer. Shakespeare.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lovely servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden.

LOG. n. f. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lizzan, Saxon, to lie; Junius from logge, Dutch, sluggish; perhaps the Latin, lignum, is the true original.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt injoin'd to pile. Shakespeare.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no
logs are. Bacon.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An sleeky drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr.
Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil. Lev.

LOGARITHMS. n. f. [logarithme, Fr.
[λογος and ἀριθμός.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchiston, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of aificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proposition, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one; for instance,

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9
1 2 4 8 16 32 64 128 256 512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportionable are called logarithms.
The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and thus saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and tripling them for the cube, and so on. Harris.

LOGGERS. n. f.

Loggers is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. Hanner.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggers with them? Shakespeare. Hamlet.
LOGGERHEAD. n. f. [logge, Dutch, stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blackhead.] A dolt;
a blockhead; a thickscul.

Where hast been, Hal?
—With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hughheads. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires? Le Strange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; to
To go to LOGGERHEADS. } fight without weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master. Le Esli.
LOGGERHEAD'D. adj. [from loggerhead.]
Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerhead and unpolish'd groom, what no attendance? Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
LOGICK. n. f. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from λογος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our enquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. Watts's Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk. Shakespeare.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. Clarendon.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gag'd and bound,
There stript fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. Pope.

LOGICAL. adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.
The heretick complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hobbes.
Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. Dryden.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Addison.

LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. Prior.

LOGICIAN. n. f. [logician, French; lo-gicus, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creature by the faculty of laugher. Addison.

Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur. Pope's Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception. Swind.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and then subtilty upon their author, Boerhaave.

LOGMAN. n. f. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake

Am I this patient logman. Shakespeare's Tempest.
LOGOMACHY. n. f. [λογμαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of tophitry and logomachy. Havel.

LOGWOOD. n. f.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture: and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. Hill's Mat. Med.
To make a light purple, mingle caustic with log-wood water. Pea-lam.

LO'HOCK. n. f.

Lo'hock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called eclegmas, lambatives, or linctives.

Lo'hocks and pectorals were prescribed, and vene-resection repeated. Wise-man's Surgery.

LOIN. n. f. [llwyn, Welsh.]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.
2. Loins; the reins.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Shakespeare.
Virgin mother, hail!

High in the love of Heaven! yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son Of God most high. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A multitude! like which the populous north
Pour'd never from her fountains loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons
Came like a deluge on the south. Milton.

To LOTTER. v. n. [loteren, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you lotter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. Shakespeare.
Whence this long delay?

You lotter, while the spoils are thrown away. Dryden.
Mark how he spends his time, whether he unsuccessfully lotter it away. Locke.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have lottered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity.

LOTTERER. n. f. [from lotter.] A linger-er; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a larger cry,
And daily to thy men have a good eye. Tasso's Rinaldo.
The poor, by idleness or want, are riotous spencers, vagabonds, and lotterers. Hayward.

Where hast thou been, thou lotter?
Though my eyes close, my arms have still been open'd.

To search if thou wert come. Ormay.
Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, saving the to employ our industry, that we live not like dis-lotterers and idlers. Milton.

Ever little lotterers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. Pope.

LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

To lean idly, to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me;
 He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
 But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Close by a softly murmuring stream,
 Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. Isidore.
 To loll on couches, rich with velvet fleecy,
 And lay your guilty limbs in Syrian beds. Dryden.
 Void of care he lolls supine in state,
 And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryden.
 But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
 We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.
 A lary, lolling sort

Of ever listless lollers. Dunster.
 2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple pointer of the Stygian feat,
 With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet. Dryden.
 With humbly play amidst the bowls he pass'd,
 And with his lolling tongue assayed the taste. Dryden.
 70 LONG. v. a. To put out: used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defect are blind;
 Hadd thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
 To see the people, when I play mouths they make,
 To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
 Then tongue loll'd out a foot. Dryden's Persius.
 By Strymon's freezing stream he sat alone,
 Trees bent their head to hear hunting his wrongs,
 Ice-cygers couch'd around, and loll'd their tawny tongues. Dryden's Virgil.

LONG. n. f. A kind of roundish fish.

LONG. adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause. Shakespeare.

Look you, he must seem thus to the world;
fear not your advancement. Shakespeare.

Look, when the world hath fewer barbarous people, but such as will not marry, except they know means to live, as it is almost every where at this day, except Tartary, there is no danger of inundations of people. Bacon's Essays.

Look you! we that pretend to be subject to a constitution, must not carve out our own quality;
for at this rate a cobbler may make himself a lord.

Collier on Pride.

Look. n. s.

1. Air of the face; mien; cast of the countenance.

Then cream-fac'd loon,
Where got'st thou that good look? Shakespeare.

And though death be the king of terrors, yet pity, diffidence, and poverty, have frightful looks, able to discomfit most men. Locke.

2. The act of looking or seeing.

Thou on the ground he call a furious look,
And wither'd all their strength. Dryden.

When they met they made a fury band,
And glar'd, like angry lions, at they pass'd,
And with'd that every look might be their last.

Dryden.

Look. n. s. [from look.]

1. One that looks.

2. Looker-on. Spectator, not agent.

Shepherds poor pipe, when his harsh sound testifies anguish, into the fair looker-on, passion not passion enters. Sidney.

Such labour is then more necessary than pleasant, both to them which undertake it, and for the lookers on. Hooker.

My business in this state
Made me a looker on here in Vienna;
Where I have seen corruption boll and bubble
Till it o'er-run the flow. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

Did not this fatal war affront thy coast,
Yet lookest thou an idle looker on? Fairfax.

The Spaniard's valour lies in the eyes of the looker on; but the English valour lies about the soldier's heart: a valour of glory and a valour of natural courage are two things. Bacon.

The people love him;
The looker on, and the enquiring vulgar,
Will talk themselves to action. Dehnam's Sophy.

He with'd he had indeed been gone,
And only to have stood a looker on. Addison's Ovid.

Look. n. s. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loon.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd loon!
Where got'st thou that good look? Shakespeare. Mac.

The fair loon, who could not work his will
By open force, employ'd his flustering skill:
I hope, my lord, said he, I am offend'd.
Are you afraid of me that are your friend? Dryden.

This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or,
as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jack of all trades.

A husband's History of John Bull.

Loop. n. s. [from loopen, Dutch, to run.]

A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loop or fringe was there,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this, so curious network, to compare. Spenser.

Make me to see, or at least to prove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on. Shakespeare's Othello.

Bind our crooked legs in hoops
Masks of shells with silver loops. Ben Jonson.

An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops. Addison.

Lo'op. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.

Poor naked wretches, where'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these? Shakespeare. King Lear.

Lo'op-hole. n. s. [loop and hole.]

these are blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle. Dryden's Spanish Fryer.

2. A shift; an evasion.

Needless, or needful, I not now contend,
For still you have a loop-hole for a friend. Dryden.

Lo'op-hole. adj. [from loop-hole.] Full of holes; full of openings, or void spaces.

This uneasy loop-hole'd goal,
In which y' are hamper'd by the sedock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wellbeck. Hudibras.

Loord. n. s. [loord, Dutch; leurdant,

French; lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevoyn de- river leurdant from Lorde or Lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of inability, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as in English, you pretty rogue;

though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness. —

Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord;
and therefore the Danes, that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdans, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortun'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death; but being afterwards expelled, the name of lurdans became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quarant ages the fever lurdans. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid stupidity rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean. A drone.

Siker, thou'st but a lurdan loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

Thou with loud terms, and witless words
To bless mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Paff-mil.

15. To break Loose. To gain liberty.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination which keeps us from chasing the worse, be liberty, madness and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

Like two black storms on either hand,
Our Spanish army and the Indians stand;
This only space betwixt the clouds is clear,
Where you, like day, broke loose from both appear. Dryden.

16. To let Loose. To set at liberty; to set at large; to free from any restraint.

And let the living bird loose into the open field. Lev. xiv.

We ourselves make our fortunes good or bad; and when God lets loose a tyrant upon us, or a sickness, if we fear to die, or know not to be patient, the calamity sits heavy upon us. Taylor.

In addition and division, either of space or duration, it is the number of its repeated additions or divisions that alone remains distinct, as will appear to any one who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

If improvement cannot be made a recreation, they must be let loose to the childish play they fancy; which they should be weaned from, by being made furthest of it. Locke.

Loose. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

Come, and forsake thy cloying store/
And all the busy pagantry
That wise men scorn, and fools adore;
Come, give thy soul a loose, and taste the pleasures of the poem. Dryden's Horace.

-Lucia, might my sigh swoon heart
Vex all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marcia could answer thee in sighs. Addison's Cato.

The fiery Pegasus disdain
To mind the rider's voice, or hear the reins;
When glorious fields and opening camps he views,
He runs with an unbounded loose. Prior.

Poets should not, under a pretence of imitating the ancients, give themselves such a loose in lyrics, as if there were no connection in the world. Fulton on the Classics.

2. Disposition from any restraining force.

As at large maketh us loose, except it be sharply percutted; as in the sound of a string, where it is percutted by a hard and stiff body, and with a sharp loose. Bacon.

Loosen. adv. [from loose.]

1. Not fast; not firmly; easily to be disengaged.

I thought your love eternal: was it try'd
So loosely, that a quarrel could divide it? Dryden.

by sweat, they fall likewise into looseness. Bacon.
Fat meats, in phlegmatic stomachs, procure
looseness and hinder retention.

LOOSESTRIFE, n. f. [lysamachia, Latin.]
An herb. Miller.

To LOP, v. a. [It is derived by Skinner from laubs, German, a leaf.]

1. To cut the branches of trees.
Gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments! Shakespeare.

Like to pillars,
Or hollow'd bodies, made of oak or fir,
With branches lopp'd in wood, or mountain fall'd. Milton.

The plants, whose luxury was lopp'd,
Or age with crutches underprop'd. Chauveland.
The oak, growing from a plant to a great tree,
and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.
The hook the bore; instead of Cynthia's spear,
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year. Pope.

2. To cut any thing.
The gardener may lop religion as he pleases. Howell.

So long as there's a head,
Hither will all the mounting spirits fly;
Lop that but off. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
All that denominated it paradise was lopped off by the deluge, and that only left which it enjoyed in common with its neighbour countries. Woodward's Natural History.

Rhyme sure in heedless bonds the poet ties,
Procrustes like, the ax or wheel applies,
To lop the mangled sense, or stretch it into size. Smith.

LOP, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. That which is cut from trees.
Or liker thy head very tott'le it,
So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss;
Now thyself hath lost both lop and top,
As my budding branch thou would'st crop. Spenser.
Nor should the boughs grow too big, because they give opportunity to the gain to soak into the tree, which will quickly cause it to decay, so that you must cut it down, or else both body and lop will be of little value. Martineau.

2. [LOPPA, Swedish.] A flea,
LOPPA, pret. of leap. Obsolete.

With that sprang forth a naked swain,
With spotted wings like peacock's train;
And laughing lope to a tree. Spenser's Pastoral.

LOPPER, n. f. [from lop.] One that cuts trees.

Confessing soon; yet not before her judge
Bold; or loquacious, thus abash'd reply'd. Milton.
In council she gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, brawling, ever in the wrong. Dryden.

2. Speaking.
Blind British bards, with valiant touch
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes Provoke to harmless revels. Philips.

3. Apt to blab; not secret.
LOQUACITY, n. f. [loquacitas, Latin.]
Too much talk.

Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wise man gives sufficient reason, for in the multitude of words there wanteth not sin. Ray.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by its.

LORD, n. f. [disponb, Saxon.]

1. Monarch; ruler; governor.
Man over man. Milton.

He made not lord.
Of Athens he was lord. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
We have our author's only arguments to prove,
that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.
They call'd their lord Admetus to the game,
He shook his head in answer to the name. Addison.
O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain,
Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain.
Vanity of Human Wishes.

2. Master; supreme person.
But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord. Shakespeare's March of Venice.

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.
Now being assembled into one company, rather without a lord than at liberty to accomplish their mastery, they fall to division. Hayward.
"His death to fight, but kingly to controul
Lord-like at ease, with arbitrary pow'r,
To peep the chiefs, the people to devour. Dryden.

4. A husband.
I oft in bitterness of soul deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearer lord. Pope.

5. One who is at the head of any business;
an overseer.
Grant harvest lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tupper.

6. A nobleman.
Thou art a lord, and nothing but a lord. Shakespeare.

7. A general name for a peer of England.
Nor were the crimes objected against him so clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords.
King Charles.

8. A baron, as distinguished from those of higher title.

9. An honorary title applied to officers:
as, lord chief justice, lord mayor, lord chief baron.

To LORD, v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically; with over before the subject of power.

Unrighteous lord of love! what law is this,
That me thou makest thus tormented be!
The whiles the lord in licentious bliss
Of her free will, scorning both thee and me. Spenser.

I see them *lord*ing it in London streets. Shakespeare.
Those huge tracks of ground they lorded over,
begat wealth, wealth ushered in pride. Howell.
They had by this possess'd the tow'rs of Gath,
And lorded over them whom now they leave. Milton.

I should choose rather to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,
Art thou not still a slave? Dryden's Persius.
The valour of one man th' afflicted throne
Imperial; that once lorded o'er the world, Sustain'd. Philips.

The civilizers! the disturbers say,
Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home;
And lord it where you have no right. Philips's Brit.

LORDING, n. f. [from lord.] A little lord; a lord in contempt or ridicule.

I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys.

You were pretty lordings then. Shakespeare's W. in. Tale.
To lordings proud I tane my life,
Who fast in bowers or halls;

Though dukes they be, to dukes I say,
That pride will have a fall. Swift.

LORDLING, n. f. A diminutive lord.
Traulus, of amphibious breed,
By the name from lordings sprung,
By the fire expell'd from dung. Swift.

LORDLYNESS, n. f. [from lordly.]

1. Dignity; high station.
Thou vouchsafest here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so weak. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopat.

2. Pride; haughtiness.

LORDLY, adj. [from lord.]
1. Befitting a lord.
Lordly sins require lordly estates to support them. South.

2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.
Bad as yourself, my Lord;
An't like your lordly lord protectorship! Shakespeare.
Of me as of a common enemy,
So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
I know not: lords are lordly in their wine. Milton.

Expect another message more imperious,
More lordly thund'ring than thou wilt hear. Milton.

Ev'ry rich and lordly swain,
With pride would drag about her chain. Swift.
LORDLY, adv. Imperiously; despoti-cally; proudly.

So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,
A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food. Dryden.

LORDSHIP, n. f. [from lord.]

1. Dominion; power.
Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts. Sidney.
It being set upon such an insensible rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Sidney.
They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. Mark, x. 42.

Needs must the lordship there from virtue slide. Fairfax.

2. Seignior; domain.
How can those grants of the kings be avoided, without wronging of those lords which had those lands and lordships given them? Spenser on Ireland.
There is lordship of the sea, wherein the master doth much joy, when he walketh about his own possessions. Watson.

What lands and lordships for their own know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

3. Title of honour used to a nobleman not a duke.
I assure you
The extreme horror of it almost
To air, when first I heard it. John Taylor.
I could not answer it to the world, if I gave not your lordship my testimony of being the best husband now living. Dryden.

4. Titulary compellation of judges, and some other persons in authority and office.

LORE, n. f. [from lapan, to learn.]

Lesson; doctrine; instruction.
And, for the modest lore of maidenhood
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
Oh whither shall I fly? Fairfax.

The law of nations, or the lore of war. Fairfax.
Calm regions once,
And full of peace; now tost, and turbulent!
For understanding rul'd not; and the will Heard not her lore! but in subjection now
To casual appetite. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The subtle friend his lore.
Soon learn'd, now wilder, and thus answer'd smooth. Milton.

Lo! Rome herself, proud mistress now no more
Of arts, but thund'ring against lores. Lucan.

LORE.

LORE. [leor, Saxon.] Lost; destroyed.
Not in use.

LOREL. n. f. [from leor, Saxon.] An abandoned leonard. Obsolete.

Siker thou speakest like a lewd larel
Of heaven to deem so:

How be I am but rude and villain,
Yet nearer ways I know.

Spenser's Pastorals.

TO LO'RICATE. v. a. To plate over.

Nature hath loricated, or plastered over, the sides of the tympanum in animals with ear-wax, to stop and entangle any insects that should attempt to creep in there.

Ray.

LO'RIMER. n. f. [lormier, French.]

LO'RINER. n. f. Bridlecutter.

LO'RIOT. n. f. [galgulus.] A kind of bird.

LORN. pret. pass. [of lorian, Saxon.]
Forfeited; lost.

Who after that he had fair Una lorn,
Through light misdeeming of her loyalty.

Fairy Q.

TO LOSE. v. a. pret. and part. lost.
[leor, Saxon.]

1. To forfeit by unsuccessful contest: the contrary to win.

I fought the battle bravely which I lost,
And lost it but to Macedonians.

Dryden.

The lightened couriers ran;
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day.

Dryden.

2. To forfeit as a penalty. In this sense is Paradise lost.

Fame—few, alas! the casual blessing boast,
So hard to gain, so easy to be lost!

Pope.

3. To be deprived of.

He lost his right hand with a shot, and, instead thereof, ever after used a hand of iron.

Kauller.

Who conquer'd him, and in what fatal strife
The youth, without a wound, could lose his life.

Dryden.

4. To suffer diminution of.

The fear of the Lord goeth before obtaining of authority; but roughness and pride is the losing thereof.

Eccles. x. 21.

If salt have lost his favour, wherewith shall it be salted?

Matthew.

5. To possess no longer: contrary to keep.
They have lost their trade of woollen drapery.

Graunt.

No youth shall equal hopes of glory give,
The Trojan honour and the Roman boast,
Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost.

Dryden.

We should never lose sight of the country, though sometimes entertained with a distant prospect.

Adijon.

6. To lose, so as not to find.

Venus wept the sad disaster
Of having lost her fav'rite dove.

Prior.

7. To separate or alienate. It is perhaps in this sense always used passively, with so before that from which the separation is made.

But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bow shall flow, my flocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove.

Pope.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard if their memory be reproached.

Swift.

8. To ruin; to send to perdition.

In spite of all the love we can boast,
The woman that deludes is lost.

Addison.

9. To bewilder; so as that the way is no longer known.

I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city.

Shaksp.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unregulated and confused variety to distract and lose the mind.

King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetition of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept best by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself.

Locke.

But rebel wit defects thee off in vain,
Lost in the maze of words he turns again.

Pope.

10. To deprive of.

How should you go about to lose him a wife
he loves with so much passion?

Temple.

11. Not to employ; not to enjoy.

The happy have whole days, and those they use;
Th' unhappy have but hours, and these they lose.

Dryden.

To lose these years which worthier thoughts require,

To lose that health which should those thoughts inspire.

Savage.

12. To squander; to throw away.

I no more complain,
Time, health, and fortune are not lost in vain.

Pope.

13. To suffer to vanish from view.

Like following life in creatures we distrust,
We lose it in the moment we detect.

Pope.

Of in the passions' wild rotation lost,
Our spring of action to ourselves is lost.

Pope.

14. To destroy by shipwreck.

Where first my shipwreck'd heart was lost.

Prior.

15. To throw away; to employ ineffec-tually.

He has merit, good-nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery.

Pope's Letters.

16. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire.

Clarendon.

17. To be freed from; as, to lose a fever.

His feely back the bunch has got Which Edwin lost before.

Parnel.

TO LOSE. v. n.

1. Not to win.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who lose, and who wins; who's in, who's out.

Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.

Wisdom in discourse with her
loses discountenance; and like folly shews.

Milton.

LOSEABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.

Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it,
be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general,
and not loseable by them.

Boyle.

LO'SEL. n. f. [from lorian, to perish.]
A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow.

A word now obsolete.

Such loses and scattellings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenser.

A lofel wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast.

Fairy Queen.

Be not with work oblofel wis defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named.

Hubbard's Tale.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose loses by loses doth shew
More heere than is needful to tell.

Tusser's Husb.

A gross hag!
And, lofel, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.

Shakespeare.

LO'SER. n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.

Shakespeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time.

Taylor's Holy Living.

It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it.

Temple.

A bull with gilded horns
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief;
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief.

Dryden.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak.

South.

LOSS. n. f. [from lose.]

1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good: the contrary to gain.

The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others.

Hooker.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss.

Eccles.

The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss.

Locke.

2. Miss; privation.

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
—No other harm but loss of such a lord.

Shakespeare.

—The loss of such a lord includes all harms.

Shakespeare.

3. Deprivation; forfeiture.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain.

Milton.

4. Destruction.

Her fellow ships from far her loss descri'd;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside.

Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt.

Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle: used only in the following phrase.

Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend.

South's Sermons.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object.

Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with.

Baker on Learning.

6. Useless application.

It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse.

Addison.

LOST. participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.

In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coast,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost.

Pope.

LOT. n. f. [blaut, Gothick; plor, Saxon;
lot, Dutch.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.

Kala at length conclude my ling'ring lot;
Disdain me not, although I be not fair,
Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn.

Sidney.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not, we lose what we have already.

Leff.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat.

Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions the divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides.

Dryden.

Ulysses

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to show, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Broom.

3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes: as, to pay scot and lot.

LOT tree or nettle tree. n. f. A plant.

The leaves of the lot tree are like those of the nettle. The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to, the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

LOTOS. n. f. [Latin.] See LOTE.

The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos the name divine, nectarous juice. Pope.

LOTION. n. f. [lotio, Latin; lotion, Fr.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two corymbes of water. Quincy.

LOTTERY. n. f. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.]

A game of chance; a fortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-fighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress,

Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,

And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.

Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a lottery for their work. South.

LOVAGE. n. f. [lewisicum, Latin.] A plant.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have faltered out into complaint or loudness. South.

LOVE. v. a. [Lucian, Saxon.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;

It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be made all of fantasy;

All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;

All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare.

I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wise. Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew,
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,

And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.

The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,
I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand

Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

What need a vermilion'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn? Milton.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life. Milton.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know y' are in my pow'r by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue for much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers?

That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Daniel, i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. John, xiii. 35.

9. Fondness; concord.

Come, love and health to all!
Then I'll fit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shakespeare.

Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.

10. Principle of union.

Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South.

11. Picturesque representation of love.

The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves bestow. Dryden.

12. A word of endearment.

'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

13. Due reverence to God.

I know that you have not the love of God in you. John.

Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friend, the other betwixt lovers, the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, an esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Harmonia.

The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arm but those of love. Taylor.

14. A kind of thin silk stuff. Ainsworth.

This leaf held near the eye, and over'd to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of crystal, or loveboard. Boyle on Colours.

The children are educated in the different notions of their parents: the sons follow the father, while the daughters read love letters and learn to their mother. Addison's Spectator.

LOVEBILT.

The low spring, with lavish rain,
Beat down the slender stem and bearded grain.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature was a low countenance, I withdrew myself from this uncomfortable scene.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low is,
And heavily in clouds bring on the day.

It on Swale's bank the welkin low is,
And every pent-up air was hilly now,
Twice twenty days that clouds then fleeced down.

2. To frown; to pout; to look fullen.

There at Parnassus when Actæon low he,
and one or her foot did my play, who weeping, and withal
*low*ing, one might see the workman meant to set forth each of us.

He in front the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sudden discontent sat *low*ing on her face;
Then impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Then turbulent in rattling tone she spoke.

LOW WIRE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Cloudiness; gloominess.

2. Cloudiness of look.

Throckmold was pale as Ze'vaine, not without to mighty a *low*er as that face could yield.

LOWERINGLY. adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily.

LOWERMOST. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.

Plants have then seminal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost.

It will also happen, that the same put of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in comparison to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts.

LOWLAND. n. f. [low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.

What a devil's he?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the torry fens,
Then breathe the balmy stench with all his force.

No natural cause the found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs.

Whereto the climber upward treads his face.

The king becoming tract,
As justice, verity, temperance, fliberty,
Founty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.

With lowliness majestic, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to with her stay, Rode.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice, it is my duty, to give testimony to virtue.

LOWLY. adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for
I am meek and lowly in heart.

He did bend to us a little, and put his arms about. we of our parts studied him in a very lowly and fulsome manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.

With cries they fill'd the holy lane;
Then thus with lowly voice Thomas began.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superior to our own!

2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
Thine earl poems, and their low's strain,
The name of Varus oft inscribed shall be.

LOWLY. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught, I know my business is but to the court.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And hence with humble liver in content,
Than to be pick'd up in a glistering guff,
And wear a golden trower.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heaven is for thee too high
To know what passes there, be lowly wife;
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.

Another crowd
Pron'd the same request, and lowly bow'd.

LOWN. n. f. [lun, Irish; lon, Dutch, a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal.
Not in use.

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His hierches cost him but a crown,
He thought them sixpence all too dear,
And therefore call'd the taylor lown.

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

By th' height of the lowness, or the mean, if death
Or fozon for us.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit
cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.

In Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth.

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughter.

Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palt' in the shift of lowness.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to lofti-ness of stile or sentiment.

His stile is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the lowness of his metaphysics.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and twenty years under so politic a king as his father.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person.

mind, and then, in the place of a doidedly young fellow, you have a lowspirited moped creature.

LOXODROMICK. n. f. [loxos and dromos.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them, hence the table of rhombs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick.

LOYAL. adj. [loyal, French.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloucester's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me fool.

fell out with the homebians.

LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king;
with fidelity to a lover.

The chiding year I wait, with ampler stores,
And sifter pump, to hui my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd.

LOYALTY. n. f. [loiaute, French.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith more folly, yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his matter conquer.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required.

Abdiel faithful found
Unshaken, uneduc'd, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept.

For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon.

LOYALTY. n. f. [loiaute, French. Of unknown etymology.]

1. A rhomb.

Ben Jonson.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucid orb,
Through his glass and quick tube, yet never saw.

Newton.

LU'CID. adj. [lucidus, Latin; lucide, French.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms

A military vest of purple flow'd, Livelier than Meliboean.

Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again quater it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light.

Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electrick vapour, which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm.

Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the rising ore to gold.

Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

On the fertile banks

Of Abbarra and Pharpar, lucid it rams.

Milton.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by their lucid substance.

Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long distinctions of the two houses, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth.

Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval,
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no rays,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book.

Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their consciences.

Bentley.

He told me, that a bellion had ill luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.

Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass in common opinion, for the wise, have not had a very different fate.

Temple.

Such, how he is, for every man has the luck to be what it is, or far from being lucid, indeed.

Shakespeare.

The luck is found too common for the treat,
But all the same, who had the luck to eat,
Swear they had tasted more delicious meat.

Tate.

LU'CKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap.

It is the pencil thrown lucidly full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form.

Dryden's Description.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications.

1805

Add. Jon.

LUCKINESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance, and I know not whether the *lucky*ness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding.

Locke.

LUCKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy.

Glad of such luck, the lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather wealth in many miseries. Fairy Queen.
Never shall my thoughts be false,

Through lucky, yet without disgrace. Sackling.
What else but his immoderate lust of power,
Pray's made and granted in a lucky hour? Dryd.

LUCKY. adj. [from luck; gelukkig, Dut.] Fortunate; happy by chance.

But I more fearful, or more lucky wight,
Disma'd with that deform'd, dismal sight,
Fly'd fast away. Fairy Queen.

Perhaps some arm more lucky than the rest
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. Addison's Cato.

LUCRATIVE. adj. [lucratus, French; lucratus, Lat.] Gainful; profitable; bringing money.

The trade of merchandize, being the most lucrative, may bear usury at a good rate: other contracts not so. Bacon.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to pursue the more dangerous way of living by war, than the more lucrative method of life by agriculture.

Broom.

LUCRE. n. f. [lucrum, Latin.] Gain; profit; pecuniary advantage. In an ill sense.

Milice and lucre in them
Have laid this woe here. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

They all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn
Of lucre and ambition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd,
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride,
The rage of power, the blast of publick breath,
The lust of lucre, and the dread of death. Pope.

LUCRIFEROUS. adj. [lucrum and fero, Lat.] Gainful; profitable.

Silver war afterward separated from the gold,
but in so small a quantity, that the experiment,
the cost and pains considered, was not lucriferous.

Boyle.

LUCRIFICK. adj. [lucrum and facio, Latin.] Producing gain.

LUCTATION. n. f. [luctor, Lat.] Struggle; effort; contest.

Dryden.

TO LUG. v. a. [aluccan, Saxon, to pull; loga, Swedish, the hollow of the hand]

1. To hale or drag; to pull with rugged violence.

You gods! why this

Will lug your priests and servants from your side.

Shakespeare.

Thy bear is safe, and out of peril,
Though lugg'd indeed, and wounded very ill. Hudib.

When savage bears agree with bears,
Shall secret ones lug faults by th' ears? Hudibras.

For him drag his feeble legs about Like hounds ill coupled. Jowley lugs him still Through hedges. Dryden.

Whose pleasure is to see a trumpet tear
A cynick's beard, and lug him by the hair.

Dryden.

Either every single animal spirit must convey,
a whole representation, or else they must divide the image amongst them, and so lug off every one's his share.

Collier.

2. TO LUG OUT. To draw a sword, in burlesque language.

But buff and belmen never know these cares,
No time, nor to law, their action bears,
They will be haled, they lug out and cut. Dryd.

TO LUG. v. n. To drag; to come heavily; perhaps only misprinted for lags.

My slugging soul flies under her own pitch,

Spenser.

LU GUAGE. n. f. [from lug.] Any thing cumbersome and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back.

Shakespeare.

What do you mean

To doat thus on such luggage? Shakespeare's Tem.

I think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politick maxims, or that cumbersome
Luggage of war there shewn me. Milton's Par. Reg.

How durst thou with that sullen luggage
Of th' self, old men, and other baggage,
To oppose thy lumber against me? Hudibras.

The wind of man is too light to bear much cer tainty among the rustling winds of passion and opinion; and at the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked.

Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind.

Dryden.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey.

Swift to Pope.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubre, French; lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humiliations.

Decay of Folly.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Saxon, is leod; in old Frisick blj; in Dutch lieute; whence probably our lute, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; to warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary corse, whose life, away did pass,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas!

Fairy Queen.

May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of mouth-friends. Smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to temperate hot and sharp humours.

Wise man's Surgery.

Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone distils with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat?

Newton's Opticks.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.

If some few continue stedfast, it is an obedience to lukewarm and languishing, that it meets not the name of passion.

Dryden.

This lukewarm conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots.

Addison's Cato.

LUKEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth.

2. With indifference.

Spenser.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness.

Swift.

TO LULL. v. a. [lula, Danish; lallo, Latin.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickle softly down

A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
Amongst the pumy fountains, and made a sound
To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay. Fairy Queen.

Such sweet compulsion doth in nuptial lie,
To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

These lull d by nightingales embracing sleep.

Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find a foe it shall not be his hug,
And peace shall lull him in her flowery lap. Milton.

No more these scenes my meditations add,
Or lull to rest the visionary mad.

Pope.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
And lost in lonely musing in a dream.

Thomson.

LU'LLABY. n. f. [lullus, Latin. Quem nutricum suis deum contendit Turne-

bus,

hus, from lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to lull babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles keft,
Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fanfax.
Pha'mel, with melody,
Sing in your sweet lullaby;

Lulla, lulla, lullaby; Lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shaksp.
If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shaksp.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LUMBA'GO. n. f. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.]

Lumbago's are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers; they are most commonly from fullness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawning, shuddering, and cramp-like pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of secretions. Quincy.

1. UMBER. n. f. [loma, xeloma, Saxon, household-stuff; lommering, the dirt of an house, Dutch.] Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated
By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
And thrown amongst the common lumber. Ormsby.

One son at home
Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
If to some useful art he be not bred,
He grows more lumber, and is worse than dead. Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. Dryden.

It God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Gray.

The poring schiafts mark;
Wit, who, like owl, see only in the dark;
A lumber house of books in every head. Pope.

2. LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Roils we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Rymer.

3. LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

But let them run at large,
Not lumber at the mady, nor cross the wood. Dunder.

LUMINAIRE. n. f. [luminare, Lat. luminaire, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.

The great luminary
Dispenses light from far. Pope.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.

Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Warton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.

The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Bentley.

LUMINATION. n. f. [from lumen, Lat.]
Emission of light. Ditt.

LUMINOUS. adj. [lumineux, French.]

1. Shining; emitting light.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. Bacon.

Its first convex divides
The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd,
From chaos. Milton.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averle
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatick colours are the yellow and orange; these affect the sense more strongly than all the rest together. Newton.

LUMP. n. f. [lump, Dutch.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Bogle.

A wretch is prisoner made;
Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut. Tate.

Ev'ry fragrant flower, and od'rous green,
Were fort'd wall, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being; and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shaksp.

Why might there not have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together? Kail against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All men's honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pinch he please. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure: but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward's Natural History.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Adison.

Other epidemical vices are rise and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are seigniorized in a lump, under the notion of being peers. Swift.

5. LUMP. v. a To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expences ought to be lumped together.
As if? Pasquier.

Beccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counter-poise the Spaniards upon thus reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Adison.

LUMPSH. n. f. [lump and fish] A sort of fish.

LUMPING. adj. [from lump] Large;
heavy; great. A low word.

LUMPIH. adj. [from lump] Heavy;
gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man,
and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh.

Syllable lumpish, heavy, melancholy. As if? Pasquier.
Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night-tricks play,
Than we, we are too dull and lumpish. Swickling.

Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the greatest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made the way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet would but it over the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strive
In every age the lump to move. Pope.

LUMPSLEY. adv. [from lumpish] With heaviness; with stupidity.

LUMPSINESS. n. f. [from the e-tive] Stupid heaviness.

LUMPY. adj. [from lump] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spates to dig hard lumpy cl.
but too hard for light lump soil. Maitland.

LUNACY. n. f. [from luna, the moon.]
A kind of madness induced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and lunacy as well a dark house and a whip is madness to and the reason why they are not to punish lunacy is, that the lunacy is to ordinary, that the lunacy are in love too. Swift.

Your kindred lunacy are here,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shaksp.

There is difference of lunacy. I had rather be mad with him, than, when he had nothing thought, all the ships that came into the haven but, then with you, who, when you have lunacy coming, think you have nothing. Shaksp.

LUNAR. } adj. [lunare, Fr. lunaris,
LUNARY. } Latin]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, lunary of a month, or lunary years, are easily confuted. Raleigh.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our toiling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world securely pry. Pope.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon.

They have denominated some herbs lunar and some lunar, and such like say not into great word. Bacon's Natural History.

The figure of its red much resembles a lunar shoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought to have a significat on, and raised the same with a lunar representation. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

LUNARY. n. f. [lunaria, Latin; lunare, French.] Moonwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue
With many drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Dryden's Hippolyte.

LUNATED. adj. [from luna] Formed like a half moon.

LUNATICK. adj. [lunaticus, Lat.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms, Sometimes with lunatick bars, sometimes with prayers,

Enforce their charity. Shaksp.

LUNATICK. n. f. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
The madman. Shaksp. Measure for Measure's Dream.

I dare ensure any man well in his wit, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years, because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Gravel's Bills.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The tot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of idiots and lunatics. See.

LUNATION. n. f. [lunation, French;

LUP

luna, Latin.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunation be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever.

Holder on Time.

LUNCH. } n. f. [Minshaw derives it from lunja, Spanish;

LU'NCHON. } from lunja, Spanish; Skinner from kleinken, a small piece, Teutonic. It probably comes from clutch or clunch. As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I flung the lunch from the barley loaf.
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well the melfs.

Gay.

LUNE. n. f. [luna, Latin.]

1. Any thing in the shape of an half moon.

A troop of Janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes, or lunes,
Form as they stood.

Watts.

water, to leave inside of a faulst braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage - it is fix roiles in extent, of which the parapet is four.

Trevoux.

LUNGS. n. f. [lungen, Saxon; long, Dutch.] The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wadded so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.

Shakespeare.

The bellows of his lungs began to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel.
Hae I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishment those crimes have met.

Dryden.

LU'NGED. a. f. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for a stroke,
While the lung'd bellows blowing fire invokes.

Dryden.

LUNG GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs soon time grow to the skin that lines the breast within, when such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown.

Harvey.

It is a pulpitaceous flower, out of whose em-pament issue the pulse, which afterwards turns to a pod filled with either plane or spherical seeds
the leaves grow like fingers up in the root stalks.

When Proteus would undertake any excellent task, he used to diet himself with peas and lu-

LUR

pires, that his invention might be quick and refin'd.

Placbum on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grow,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year.

Dryden.

LURCH. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from Pourche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch?

Denham.

But though thou'rt of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch.

Hudibras.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch.

Leffrang.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is bale to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last.

Arbut.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late retrenchments.

Addison's Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [loeren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

2. [Massue, French; masa, Latin.] A heavy blunt weapon; a club of metal.

O mouth'sious slumber!
Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy
That plays thee music? Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.
The Turkish troops breaking in with their scymitars and heavy iron maces, made a most bloody execution. Kiriles.

Death with his mace petrified smote.
With his mace their monarch struck the ground,
With inward trembling earth receiv'd the wound,
And rising streams a ready passage found. Dryden.
The mighty mace with such swift descent,
They break the bones, and make the armour bend. Dryden.

3. [Macis, Latin.] A kind of spice.

The nutmeg is inclosed in a threefold covering, of which the second is mace: it is thin and membranaceous, of an oleaginous and a yellowish colour; it has an extremely fragrant, aromatick, and agreeable smell, and a pleasant, but acid and oleaginous taste. Hist. Mat. Medica.

Water, vinegar, and honey, is a most excellent sudorific: it is more effectual with a little mace added to it. Arbutnot.

MACULI. n. f. [mace and ale.] Ale spiced with mace.

I prescribed him a draught of macul, with hopes to dispose him to rest. Wife'sman's Surgery.

MACHINATION. n. f. [machinatio, Lat. machination, Fr. from machinatus.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you misarry,
Your business of the world hath to an end,
And machination ceases. Shakspeare's King Lear.
O from their machinatus treason,
That would my guiltless soul betray;
I from those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay!

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton.
How were they zealous in respect to their temporal governors? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Spratt.

MACHINE. n. f. [machina, Latin; machine, Fr.] This word is pronounced may-been.

1. Any complicated work in which one part contributes to the motion of another.

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine,
The added movements which declare,
How full the moon, how old the year,

Derive the secondary power
From that which simply points the hour. Pope.

2. An engine.

In the hollow file,
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the ma-bins they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryden.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The marvellous fable includes whatever supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

MACHINERY. n. f. [from machine.]

MA'CKREEL. n. f. [mackereel, Dutch; maquereau, French.] A sea-fish.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting and mackreels. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Law ordered that the Sunday should have rest;
And that no nymph her noisy toad should sell,
Except it were new milk or mackerel. King's Cuckoo.

Sooner shall cats disport in water clear,
And speckled mackreels graze the meadows fair,
Than I forget my shepherd's wonted love. Gay.

MACKEREL-GALE seems to be, in Dryden's cant, a strong breeze; such, I suppose, as is desired to bring mackerel flesh to market.

They put up every sail,
The wind was fair, but blew a mackreel-gale. Dryden.

MA'CROCOSM. n. f. [macrocosme, French; μακρος and κοσμος.] The whole world, or visible system, in opposition to the microcosm, or world of man.

And lastly, the body of the sun may contract some spots or maculae greater than usual, and by that means be darkened. Burnet's The. of the Earth.

2. [In phytick.] Any spots upon the skin, whether those in fevers or scorbutick habits.

TO MACULATI. v. a. [maculo, Latin] To stain; to spot.

MACULATION. n. f. [from maculatus] Stain; spot; taint.

I will throw my glove to death himself,
That there's no maculation in thy heart. Shakspeare.

MA'CuLE. n. f. [macula, Latin.] A spot; a stain.

MAD. adj. [gemaad, Saxon; matto, Italian.]

1. Disordered in the mind; broken in the understanding; distracted; delirious without a fever.

Alack, Sir, he is mad.

—'Tis the time's plague when madmen lead the blind.

This musick made me, let it sound no more;
For though it have help'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.

Shakespeare.

Cupid, of the poets song,

Thy mother from the sea was sprung;
But they were mad to make thee young. Denham.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad folks they break their larks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

A bear, enraged at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the bee-garden, and overturn'd all the hives.

L'Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad,
But who can help his frenzy? Dryden's Spanish Fr.
But some strange graces and odd light, she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.

His gestures force

He mark'd, and mad demeanour when alone.

Milton.

3. Over-run with any violent or unreasonable desire: with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jer. l. 38.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatick writing. Dryden.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymel.

4. Enraged; furious.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havock of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them.

Decay of Pity.

To MAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to en-rage.

O villain! cried out Zelmae, madd'd with finding an unlook'd for rival. Sudney.

This will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. Shakespeare Cymbeline.

This madd me, that perhaps ignoble hands
Have overlaid him, for they could not conquer.

Shakespeare.

To MAD. v. n. To be mad; to be furious.

The madding wheels
Of brazen chariots rag'd, dur'd the noise
Of conflicts! Milton's Parady. Lost.

She, mixing with a throng
Of madding matrons, bears the bride along.

Dryden.

MAD. n. f. [maðu, Saxon.] An earth-worm.

Ansforth.

MA'DAM. n. f. [ma dame, French, my dame.] The title of compliment used in address to ladies of every degree. It was anciently spoken as in French, with the accent upon the last syllable.

Certes, madam, ye have great cause of plaint.

Spenser.

Madam, once more you look and move a queen.

Keats.

MA'DBRAIN. } adj. [mad and brain.]
MA'DBRAINED } Disordered in the mind; botheaded.

I give my hand oppos'd against my heart,
Unto a madbrain rudeby, full of spleen. Shakespeare.

He let fall his book,

And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
Thus madbrain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
That down fell priest and book. Shakespeare.

MA'DCAP. n. f. [mad and cap; either taking the cap for the head, or alluding to the caps put upon distracted persons by way of distinction.] A madman;
a wild hotbrained fellow.

That last is Byron, the merry madcap lord;
Not a word with him but a jest. Shakespeare.

The nimble-footed madcap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that dash the world aside,
And bid it pale. Shakespeare Henry IV.

To MA'DDEN. v. n. [from mad.] To become mad; to act as mad.

The dog-flat rages, nay 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out;
Fie in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

Pope.

To MA'DDEN. v. a. To make mad.

Such mad'ning draughts of beavery,
As for a while overwhelm'd his raptur'd thought.

Thomson.

MA'DDER. n. f. [mader, Saxon.]

The flower of the madder consists of one single leaf, which is cut into four or five segments, and expanded at the top; the flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit, composed of two juicy berries closely joined together, containing seed for the most part hollowed like a navel; the leaves are rough, and surround the stalks in whorls.

Milner.

Madder is cultivated in vast quantities in Holland. what the Dutch send over for medicinal use is the root, which is only dried, but the greatest quantity is used by the dyers, who have it sent in coarse powder. Hill.

MADE, participle preterite of make.

Neither hath this man sinned, nor his parents;
but that the works of God should be made manifest.

John, ix. 3.

MA'DHOUSE. n. f. [mad and house.] A house where madmen are cured or confined.

A fellow in a madhouse, being asked how he came there? Why, says he, the mad folks abroad are too many for us, and so they have maddered all the sober people, and cooped them up here. L'Estrange.

MA'DLY. adv. [from mad.] Without understanding; furiously.

He wav'd a torch aloft, and madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Dryd.

MA'DMAN. n. f. [mad and man] A man deprived of his understanding.

They shall be like madmen, speaking none, but still sporting. 2 Esdr. xvi. 71.

He that eagerly pursues any thing, is no better than a madman. L'Estrange.

He who ties a madman's hands, or takes away his sword, loves his person while he disarms his frenzy. South.

MA'DNESS. n. f. [from mad.]

1. Distraction; loss of understanding; perturbation of the faculties.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again. he so buffets himself on the forehead, that any madness I ever yet beheld seemed but tame-ness and civility to this distemper.

Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

There are degrees of madness as of folly, the disorderly jumbling ideas together, in some more, some less. Locke.

2. Fury; wildness of passion; rage.

The power of God sets bounds to the raging of the sea, and restrains the madness of the people.

King Charles.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, and tore his hair.

Dryden.

MADRIER. n. f.

Madrir, in war, is a thick plank armed with iron plates, having a cavity sufficient to receive the mouth of the petard when charged, with which it is applied against a gate, or other thing intended to be broken down. Bailey.

MA'DRIGAL. n. f. [madrigal, Spanish and French, from mandra, Latin; whence it was written anciently mandriale, Ital.]
A pastoral song; any light airy short song.

A madrigal is a little amorous piece, which contains a certain number of unequal verses, not tied to the scrupulous regularity of a sonnet, or subtlety of an epigram: it consists of one single rank of verses, and in that differs from a canzone, which consists of several strophes, which return in the same order and number. Bailey.

Waters, by whose falls

Birds sing melodious madrigals. Shakespeare.

His artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal. Milton.

Their tongue is light and trilling in comparison of the English; more proper for sonnets, madrigals, and elegies, than heroic poetry. Dryden.

MA'DWORT. n. f. [mad and wort.] An herb.

MAERE. adv. It is derived from the Saxon maer, famous, great, noted: so almere is all famous; rethelmere, famous for nobility. Gibson's Camden.

To MA'FFLE. v. n. To flammer.

Ansforth.

MA'FFLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A flammer.

Ansforth.

MAGAZINE. n. f. [magazine, French;
from the Arabick machsan, a treasure.]

1. A storehouse, commonly an arsenal or armoury, or repository of provisions.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and ammunitions. Raleigh's Essay.

Plain heroic magnitude of mind
Their armories and magazines contemns. Milton.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pope.

His head was so well stor'd a magazine, that nothing could be propos'd which he was not master of. Locke.

2. Of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany called the Gentleman's Magazine, and published under the name of Sylvanus Urban, by Edward Cave.

MAGE. n. f. [magus, Latin.] A magician. Spenser.

MA'GGOT. n. f. [magrod, Welch; millepeda, Latin; maðu, Saxon.]

1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.

Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have been creep out small maggots.

Ray on Creation.

From the sore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.

2. Whimsy;

2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.

Taffeta phrases, silken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, their summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In russet yeas, and honest kersey noes. Shakespeare.

To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other vents,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in taggots. Hudibras.
She picked his maggot, and touched him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

MAGGOTTINESS. n. f. [from maggot.] The state of abounding with maggots.

MAGGOTTY. adj. [from maggot.] 1. Full of maggots.

2. Capricious; whimsical. A low word. To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggoty unsettled head, is as ridi- culous as to think to write straight in a jumbling coat. Notre.

MAGICAL. adj. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.

I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shak.
They beheld unvelled the magical shield of your Aristo, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms.
Dryden.

By the use of a looking-glass, and certain active made of cambrick, upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler.

MAGICALLY. adv. [from magical.] Ac- cording to the rites of magick; by en- chantment.

In the truce of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring, magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.

MAGICK. n. f. [magia, Latin.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful: forcery; enchantment.

She once being loost,
The noble ruin of her magic, Antony,
Claps on his sea wing. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleo.
What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives? Rogers.

2. The secret operations of natural powers.

The writers of natural magick attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part fevered. Bacon.

MAGICK. adj.

1. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; en- chanted; necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that distill'd by magick flights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare.

Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear.
Gianvill.

2. Done or produced by magick.

And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake,
Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.

MAG'ICIAN. n. f. [magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakespeare.
An old magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lists, makes calmest souls to grieve.
Waller.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MAGIST'RIAL. adj. [from magister, Latin.]

1. Such as suits a master. Such a government is paternal, not magist'rial. King Charles.

He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him, and uses a magist'rial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lusty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotic.

We are not magist'rial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magist'rial looks for current payment. L'Estrange.

Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and ma-gist'rial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magillery.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magist'rial salt, to good purpose in some levers: the nature is no more than a solution of the magist'rial salt. Grew.

MAGIST'RIALLY. adv. [from magiste- rial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magist'rially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Over their pots and pipes, they claim and en-groas all wholly to themselves, magist'rially cen-suring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGIST'RIALNESS. n. f. [from magiste- rial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.

Preemptiveness is of two sorts: the one a ma-gist'rialness in matters of opinion, the other a positive-ness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

MAGISTRY. n. f. [magisterium, Latin.]

Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by in-solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c.
and sometimes resin and resinous substances: as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptance is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncon-gealed in the centre. Brown.

The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MAGISTRACY. n. f. [magistratus, Lat.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.

You share the world, her magistracies, pioushoods, Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends. Ben Jonson.

He had no other intention but to diffuse men from magistracy, or undertaking the public offices of state. Brown.

Some have disputed even against magistracy itself.
Astell.

Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Carr.

MAGISTRALLY. adv. [magistratus, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.

What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a licence to controul so magisterially? Branthall against Hobbes.

MAGISTRATE. n. f. [magistratus, Lat.] A man publicly invested with autho- rity; a governor; an executor of the laws.

They chuse their magistrate
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever shon'd in Greece. Shakespeare's Corin.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects.
Dray of Pirry.

MAGNALITY. n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.

'Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths.
Brown.

MAGNANIMITY. n. f. [magnanimité, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Great- ness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.

With deadly hue, an armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Spenser.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker.

'They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears;
'The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton.

Exploding many things under the name of titles is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNANIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Lat.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton.

In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Conf.

MAGNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from magna- nimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton on Education.

MAGNET. n. f. [magnus, Latin.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.

Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.
It may be reasonable to ask, Whether obeying
the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.

MAGNETICAL. } adj. [from magnet.] MAGNETICK. } 1. Relating to the magnet.

Review this whole magnetical scheme. Blackmore.
Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold L 2

is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetic effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetic, nor red-hot, without any diminution of its virtue, as through gold, silver, lead, glass, &c. Newton's Opticks.

Never repose so much upon any man's single count, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a dependence of your own judgment. King Charles.

When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heaven and earth confiding; and compute
Their magnitudes, this earth, a spot, a grain,

An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

Conceive these particles of bodies to be so disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all, and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton.

MA'GPIE. n. f. [from pie, pica, Latin, and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Augurs, that understood relations, have
By magpies and by choughs, and rooks brought forth
The secret'st man of blood. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Distinction is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Pea-bam on Drawing.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie hight,
Majestically stalk,
A rarely worthless animal,

'Tis a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakspeare.

I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden's eyes. Shakspeare.

She employed the residue of her life to repairing of highways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Carr.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid she rose at the approaching day. Dryden.

Let me die, she said,
Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryden.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakspeare.

Old Tincred visited his daughter's bower;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then blest'd her kneeling, and her maid dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Prior.

MA'IDENHOOF. }
MA'IDENHOOD. }

1. Virginity; virginal purity; freedom from contamination.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood,
Bids me not sojourn with these unlearn'd men.
Oh whither shall I fly, what sacred word
Shall hide me from the tyrant? or what den?

Tai fax.

She hated chambers, closets, secret noyes,
And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhood.

Loutax.

Example, that so terrible shows in the weak of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succubus, but that they are lured with the twigs that threaten them.

Shakespeare.

Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
To aid a virgin.

Milton.

2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.

The devil and mischief look big
Upon the maidenhood of our affairs.

Shakespeare.

Some who were full with much expectation, at their first appearance have stained the maidenhood of their credit with some negligent performance.

Wotton.

Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no joy's maidenhood,
Then spousal rites pre-judge the marriage-bed.

Cassio.

MAIDENLIP. n. f. [from lappage.] An heir.

Anfuorth.

MAIDENLY. adj. [maiden and like.] Like a maid; gentle, modest, timorous, decent.

'Tis not maidenly;

Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it. Stak.
You virtuous all, and bashful fool; must you be blushing? what a rascally man at arms are you become?

Shakespeare.

MAIDHOOD. n. f. [from maid] Virgini-ty.

By maidenhood, honour, and every thing,
I love thee

Change the complexion of her maidpale peace
To scarlet indignation.

Shakespeare.

MAIDSERVANT. n. f. A female servant.

It is perfectly right what you say of the indifference in common friends, whether we are sick or well; the very maid-servants in a family have the same notion.

Swift.

MAJESTICAL. } adj. [from majesty.]
MAJESTICK. }

1. August; having dignity; grand; imperial; regal; great of appearance.

'They made a doubt

Presence majestic would put him out:
For, quoth the king, an angel shalt thou see,
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.

Shakespeare.

Get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæs.

We do it wrong, being so majestic,
To offer it the show of violence.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

In his face

Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestic grace.

Dr. Ham.

A royal robe he wore with graceful pride,
Embroider'd sandals glitter'd as he trod,
And forth he mov'd, majestic as a god.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. Stately; pompous; splendid.

It was no mean thing which he purposed; to perform a work so majestic and stately was no small charge.

Hock.

3. Sublime; elevated; lofty.

Which passage doth not only argue an infinite abundance, both of citizens and materials, but likewise of magnificent and majestic desires in every common person.

Wotton.

The least portions must be of the epic kind,
all must be grave, majestic, and sublime.

Dryden.

MAJESTICALLY. adv. [from majestic.]

With dignity; with grandeur.

From Italy a wand'ring ray

Of moving light illuminates the day;
Northward she bends, majestically bright,

Cranville.

And here she fixes her imperial light.

So have I seen in black and white,

A prating thing, a magpie light,

Majestically stalk,

A stately worthless animal,

That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,

All flutter, pride, and talk.

Swift.

MAJESTY. n. f. [from majestas, Latin.]

1. Dignity; grandeur; greatness of appearance; an appearance awful and solemn.

The voice of the Lord is full of majesty.

Psalms xxix. 4.

The Lord reigneth; he is clothed with majesty.

Psalms xciii.

Amidst

Thick clouds and dork, doth Heaven's all-ruling
Sire

Chuse to reside, his glory unobscur'd,

And with the majesty of darkness round

Covers his throne.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Great, without pride, in sober majesty.

Pope.

The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,

The next in majesty.

Dryden.

4. The title of kings and queens.

Most royal majesty,

I crave no more than what your highness offer'd.
Nor will you tender less.

I have a queen opens to the bed,

From whence I can your majesty convey

To some high friend.

Walker.

He, who had been always believed a creature of the queen, visited her majesty but once in six weeks.

Clarendon.

I walk in awful state above

The majesty of heaven.

Dryden.

MAIL. n. f. [from maille, French; maglia, Italian; from maille, the mesh of a net. Skinner.]

1. A coat of steel network worn for defence.

Being advised to wear a privy coat, the duke gave this answer, That against any popular fury, a suit of mail would be but a silly defence.

Wotton.

2. Any armour

We strip the lobster of his scarlet mail.

Cry.

Some shirts of mail, some coat of plate put on,
Some don'd a curace, some a cushion bright.

Faefux.

Some wore a coat armour, imitating scale,
And next their skin were stubborn shirts of mail;

Some wore a breast-plate.

Dryden's King Lear's Tale.

3. A postman's bundle; a bag. [from maille, Fr.]

To MAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arm defensively; to cover, as with armour.

The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit
Up to the ears in blood.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. To bundle in a wrapper.

I am thy married wife,

And thou a prince, protector of this land,

Methinks I should not thus be led along,

Mail'd up in shame, with paper, on my back.

Shakespeare.

To MAIM. v. a. [from maim, Gothick, to cut off; meibagner, to maim, old French; mebaina, Armoric; manus, Latin.] To deprive of any necessary part; to cripple by loss of a limb: originally written from the French mayhem.

You wrought to be a legate, by which power
You maim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

The multitude wonder'd when they saw the dumb to speak, the maim'd to be whole, and the lame to walk; and they glorified God.

Markew, xv. 31.

MAIM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Privation of some essential part; lameness, produced by a wound or amputation.

Surely there is more cause to fear, lest the want thereof be a maim, than the use a blemish.

Ho ker

Humphry, duke of Gloucester, flatter himself,
That bears so thick a rain, two pulis at once;
A lady banish'd, and a lamb left off?

Shakespeare.

2. Injury; mischief.

Not so deep a maim,

As to be cast forth in the common air,

Have I deserved.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. Essential defect.

A noble author esteems it to be a maim in history, that the acts of parliament should not be recited.

Hayward.

MAIN. adj. [from main, old French; magnus, Latin.]

1. Principal; chief; leading.

In every grand or main publick duty which God requireth of his church, there is, besides that matter and form wherein the essence thereof consisteth, a certain outward fashion, whereby the same is in decent manner administered.

Hock.

There is a history in all men's lives,

Figuring the nature of the times occurr'd,

The which observ'd a man may prophesy,

With a near aim, of the main chance of things

As yet not come to life.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He is superstitious grown of late,

Quite from the main opinion he had once

Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare.

There arose three notorious and main rebellions, which drew several armies out of England.

Dryden's Tristram.

The nether flood,
Which now divided into four main streams,
Ran diversely.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I should be much for open war, O peer,

If what was urg'd

Main reason to persuade immediate war,

Did not dissuade me moit.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

All creatures look to the main chance, that is,
food and propagation.

Our main interest is to be as happy as we can,

and as long as possible.

Tulbiflow.

Nor tell me in a dying father's tone,

Be careful still of the main chance, my son,

Put out the principal in usury hands;

Live on the use, and never dip thy lands.

Dryden.

Whilst they have busied themselves in various learnings, they have been wanting in the one main thing.

Bacon.

Nor is it only in the main design, but they have followed him in every episode.

Pope.

2. Mighty; huge; overpowering; vast.

Thunk.

Think, you question with a Jew,
You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height.
Shakespeare.

Seest thou what rage
Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
Nor yet the main abyss,
Wide interrupt, can hold?
Milton.

3. Gross; containing the chief part.
We ourselves all follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our truest hearts.
Shak.

Charge'd our main battle's front.
Shakespeare.

4. Important; forcible.
This young prince, with a train of young noblemen and gentlemen, but not with any main army, came over to take possession of his new patrimony.
Darwin on I. cloud.

That, which thou aught
Believ'st to be main to our success, I bring.
Milton.

1. The gross; the bulk; the greater part.
The main of them may be reduc'd to language,
and an improvement in wisdom, by seeing men.
Locke.

2. The sum; the whole; the general.
They allowed the clergy and government of the church of England to the main.
King Charles.
These notions concerning coinage have, for the main, been put into writing above twelve months.
Locke.

3. The ocean; the great sea, as distinguished from bays or rivers.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by, and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.
Shakespeare.

Where's the king?
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change.
Shakespeare.
He tell, and struggling in the main,
Cry'd out for helping hands, but cry'd in vain.
Dryden.

Say, why should the collected main Itself within itself contain?
Why to its caverns should it sometimes creep,
And with delightful silence sleep
On the lov'd bottom of its parent deep?
Prior.

4. Violence; force.
He gain advance
With huge force, and importable main,
And towards him with dreadful fury prance.
Spenser.

With might and main
He hasted to get up again.
Hudibras.
With might and main they chace'd a murderous fox,

With brazen trumpets, and inflat box.
Dryden.

5. [From main, Lat.] A hand at dice.
Were it not so,
To fit the exact wealth of our states
All at one cast, to set so rich a main
In the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
Shakespeare.

To pass our tedious hours away,
We throw a merry main.
East Dorset's Song.
Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky main makes people wise:
That jumbled words, it to tune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.
Prior.

6. The continuance.
In 1589 we were challenged, and invaded the main of Spain.
Bacon's War with Spain.

7. A hamper.
Ainsworth.

MA'INLAND. n. f. [main and land] Continent. Spenser and Dryden seem to accent this word differently.
It was it island then,
Was all desolate, and of some thought
To have been from the Celtic mainland light.
Spenser.

Those whom Tyber's holy forests hide,
Or Cucc's hills from the mainland divide.
Dryden.

MA'INLY adv. [from main]

1. Chiefly; principally.
A brutish vice,
Indistinct mainly to the sin of Eve.
Milton.
They are mainly reducible to three.
Merc.

The metallic matter now found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally lodged in the bodies of those strata, being inter-sperfed amongst the matter, whereof the said strata mainly consist.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. Greatly; hugely.
It was observed by one, that himself came hardly to a little riches, and very easily to great riches:
for when a man's stock is come to that, that he can expect the price of markets, and overcome those bargains, which, for their greatness, are few men's money, and he partner in the industries of younger men, he cannot but increase mainly.
Bacon.

MA'INMAST. n. f. [main and mast] The chief or middle mast.

One due shot
Close by the board the prince's mainmast bore.
Dryden.

A Dut. man, upon breaking his leg by a fall from a mainmast, told the standers by, it was a mercy it was not his neck.
Spektator.

MA'INPERNABLE. n. f. Bailable; that may be admitted to give surety.

MA'INPERNOR. n. f. Surety; bail.
He entered the rail himself to fly, till twenty-six noblemen became mainperners for his appearance at a certain day; but he making default, the utmost advantage was taken against his sureties.
Darwin on I. cloud.

MA'INPRISE. n. f. [main and pris, Fr.]
Delivery into the custody of a friend, upon security given for appearance;
bail.

Sir William Bretingham was executed for treason, though the earl of Devon was left to main-prise.
Darwin.

Give its poor entertainer quarter;
And, by discharge or mainprise, grant
Delivery from this base restraint.
Hudibras.

To MA'INPRISE. v. a. To bail.
MA'INSAIL. n. f. [main and sail] The sail of the main mast.

They committed themselves unto the sea, and hustled on to the wind, and made toward shore.
Shakespeare.

MA'INSHIP. n. f. [main and sheet] The sheet or sail of the mainmast.

Strike, strike the top-sail; let the main-sail fly.
And full your sails.
Dryden.

MA'INYARD. n. f. [main and yard] The yard of the mainmast.

With sharp hooks they took hold of the tackling which held the mainyard to the mast, then rowing they cut the tackling, and brought the mainyard by the board.
Ainsworth.

To MAINTAIN. v. a. [maintenir, Fr.]

1. To preserve; to keep; not to suffer to change.

The ingredients being prescribed in their substance, maintain the blood in gentle fermentation, reclude opulations, and mundify it.
Harey.

2. To defend; to hold out; to make good;
not to resign.

This place, these pledges of your love, maintain.
Dryden.

God values no man more or less, in placing him high or low, but every one as he maintains his post.
Cicero's Cosmologia.

3. To vindicate; to justify; to support.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Edward earl of Gloucester, that he is a mainfold traitor, let him appear.
Shakespeare.

These possessions being unlawfully gotten, could not be maintained by the just and honourable law of England.
Darwin.

Lord Roberts was full of contradiction in his temper, and of parts so much superior to any in the company, that he could too well maintain and justify those contradictions.
Clarendon.

My right, nor think the name of mother vain.
Dryden.

MANCHINEEL

MANCHINE'EL tree. n. f. [mancanilla, Latin.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West India, and grows to the size of an oak: its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed. In cutting down these trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun, for it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen, and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippin; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature, cattle never shelter themselves, and fearfully will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Milla.

MANCIPATE. v. a [mancipo, Lat.]

To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the motions, which are in themselves more unstable, and less manipulated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale.

MAN'LY.

MANLY. adv. [from man] With courage like a man.

MANNA. n. f.

Manna is properly a gum, and is honey like juice concocted in a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres to the fingers: its colour is whitish, or brownish, and it has sweetness, and with it a sharpness, that renders it agreeable: manna is the product of two different trees, both varieties of the ash: when the leaves are free from rain, these trees exude a white juice. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an actual produce, by covering a tree with sheets in the manna taken, and the finding as much manna on it as on those which were open to the air.

Hill.

It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Lucie.

MANNER. n. f. [maniere, French.]

In a manner at our will, the affairs of earth. Aug. 1.
Augustinus does in a manner confess the ch. 1.

4. Sort; kind.

All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling places. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable,
Beyond all angel or so much I love you. Shakespeare.
What manner of men were they whom ye slew? Judas.

The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantage. Lucie.

5. Mien; cast of the look.

An and manner are more expressive than words. Clarissa.
Some men have a native dignity in their mien, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most invidious commands. Hardon's Charles.

6. Peculiar way; distinct mode of person.

It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the Latin, disposition, and manner, of the army under Lullax, and the other under Waller. Glendon.

Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endavour'd to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation. Dryden's Juvenal.

7. Way; mode: of things.

The operations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a certain, but very powerful, manner. Atterbury.

8. Manners in the plural: character of the mind.

His princes are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions, and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kind. Addison.

9. General way of life; morals; habits.

The kinds of music have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike; to make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.

Every tool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, more legible in some than others. L'Estrange.

We bring our manners to the best abodes,
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.

10. [In the plural.] Ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakespeare's King Lear.
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you. Shakespeare's Othello.
Our guests and not our manners reason now. Shakespeare.

Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mount uns and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakespeare's Tit. And.
Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate. Shakespeare.

Good manners bound her to invite
The stranger dame to be her guest that night. Dryden.

None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our aspirations to the great God, take that to be a sign, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners? South.
Your passion binds
Its force against your nearest friends,
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.

11. To take in the MANNER. To catch in the actual omission of a crime

If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner, and I sit by one too tender to these impressions. Dante.

MANNERLINES. n. f. [from mannerly.] Civility, ceremonious complaisance.

Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal bond of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MANNERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.

'Tut; tut, here's a mannerly forbearance. Shakespeare.
Let me have
W. as you'll meet, and is most mannerly. Shakespeare.

I will make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and sully religion: not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traitorous desertion of our allegiance to Christ. Rog. 1.

MANNERLY. adv. Civilly; without rudeness.

When we've supped,
Will mannerly demand thee of thy story. Shakespeare.
MANNERLY. n. f. [man and klein, German.] A little man; a dwarf.

MANNERISH. adj. [from man.] Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seemed not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a mannerish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of mankind, far fitter to prevail by parley than by battle. Sidney.
A woman, impudent and mannerish grown,
Is not more leath'd than an effeminate man. Shakespeare.

When mannerish Mevia, that two-handed whore, Affrict on horrid back hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryden.

MANNER. n. f. [manoir, old French; manerium, low Latin; maner, Armo-rick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule of government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee. Touching the original of these manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other men, in joining them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the interiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands, so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and there by they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowley.

My poles, my walks, my manors that I had,
For me a forsake me, and of all my lands
Is nothing left me. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Kinsmen of mine,
They shall abound as formerly. O many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For their great journey. Shakespeare's Richard III.
MANQUELIER. n. f. [man and epellan, Saxon] A murderer; a mankiller; a manslayer.

This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Cairns.

2. A parsonage house.

MANSION. n. f. [mansio, Latin.]

1. The lord's house in a manor.

2. Place of residence; abode; house.

All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a manfion. Sidney.

A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his manfion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His manfion, and his title, in a place
From whence himself does fly! he loves us not. Shak.
Thy manfion wants thee, Adam, rise,
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! called by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton.

A manfion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy Heaven's peculiar care,
Not tram'd of common earth. Dryden.

3. Residence; abode.

These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their manfions keep. Denham.

MANSLAUGHTER. n. f. [man and slaughter.]

1. Murder; destruction of the human species.

The whole pleasure of that book standeth in open manslaughter and bold bawdry. Afham.

To overcome in battle, and subdue Nations, and bring home spoils with infinite Manslaughter, shall be held the highest pitch Of human glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice; punished by forfeiture.

Ray on the Creation.
MA'NSUETUDE. n. f. [mansuetudo, French; mansuetudo, Latin.] Tameness; gentleness.

The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to mansuetude;
The fearful hare her ears, which by their law
Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.

MA'NTLE. n. f. [mantel, old French.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak.

From the Italians we may learn how to raise fur mantels within the room, and how to disguise the shafts of chimneys. Wotton.

If you break any china on the mantelcase or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Sancti.

MANTELET. n. f. [manetelet, French.]

1. A small cloak worn by women.
2. [In fortification.] A kind of moveable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet; they are generally cased with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small-shot: there are other manetelets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.

MANTI'GER. n. f. [man and tiger.] A large monkey or baboon.

Near these was placed, by the black prince of Monomotapa's side, the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-mimicking mantiger.

At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whole pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth. Shaksf.
Their actions were disguised with wantles, very usual in times of disorder, of religion and justice.

Hyward.
The herald and children are clothed with wantles of fatten; but the herald's mantle is stream'd with gold. Bacon.

By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sancti.

Before the sun,
Before the heav'ns thou wert, and at the voice
Of God, as with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite. Milton.

Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
Vol. II.

A filken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phaeton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole table in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

TO MA'NTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloke; to cover; to disguise.

As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so the rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shakspeare's Temp.

TO MA'NTLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; she spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To joy; to revel.
My frail fancy red with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantles most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.

3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.

The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawl'd along the side of yon small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton.

You'll sometimes meet a fop, of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head. Gay.
And where his many waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine to grow
A trophy to his love. Foster's Ode to Lord Gower.

4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.

There are a sort of men, whose visages
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond;
And do a wilful stiffness entertain,
With purpose to be diet in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit. Shaksf.

It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantles exceeding. Bacon.

From plate to plate your eye balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope.

5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.

When mantling blood
Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Sparkl'd with youthful fires; when ev'ry grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. South.

MA'NTUA. n. f. [this is perhaps corrupted from manteau, French.] A lady's gown.

Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd away,
Felt such such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy tawny hair. Pope.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappers, dillies, and mantuas. Swift.

MAP. n. f. [mappa, low Latin.] A geographical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.

Zelmune earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that the might see whether it were troubled with such uninhabitable climes of cold despairs, and hot rages, as her's was.

Sidney.

I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot.

Spenser.

Old coins are like to many maps for explaining the ancient geography.

Addison or Account General.

O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way,
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love.

Voltaire.

TO MAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To delineate; to set down.

I am near to the place where they should meet,
If Pisanio have map'd it right. Shakespeare's Cym.

Shakespeare.

TO MAR. v. a. [amrjanan, Saxon.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage. Obsolete.

Loss is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be less than himself, doth mar.
Both loser a lot, and victor's praise alto.

The master may here only humble, and perchance fail in teaching, to the *mar*ing and maintaining of the scholar in learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers mar their malt with water.

Shakespeare.

I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.

—I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them illfavouredly.

Shakespeare.

Beware thine honour be not then dignac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend.

Faust.

Aumade became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indiscretion, chance, or worse.

Barth.

The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and *mar*s business when great in dependencies.

Fijays.

O! could

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!

How mutually they link'd and folded are:

And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than marr. Davies.

Ire, envy, and despair,
Marr'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd Him counterfeit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Had she been there, untimely joy through all Mens hearts diffus'd, had marr'd the funeral. Waller.

Mother!

'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey:
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But mirth is marr'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.

MARANATHA. n. f. [Syriack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'tt thou be devoted to the greatest of evils, and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Calmet.

MARASMUS. n. f. [μαρασμός, from μαρῖναι.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance. Quincy.

Pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide-wasting peltence. Milton.

A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harvey.

MARBLE. n. f. [marbre, French; mar-mor, Latin.]

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble. Shakespeare.

Thou marble, hew'd ere long to part with breath,
And hours rear'd, unmanful of thy death. Sandys.

Some dry their corn infested with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine. Dryden.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water, being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble. Locke.

2. Little balls, supposed to be of marble, with which children play.

Marbles taught them percussion, and the laws of motion; nutcrackers the use of the lever. Arbutnot and Pope.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription: as, the Oxford marbles.

MARBLE. adj.

Made of marble.

Pigmalion's fate reviv'd is mine,
His marble love took flesh and blood,
All that I worshipp'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife. Waller.

1. Variegated, or stained like marble.

Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the purity of my virgin mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word. Sidney.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, pitched, and with a marble cover. Swift.

TO MARBLE. v. a. [marbrer, French, from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd. Gay.

MARBLEPHEARTYD. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; inflexible; hard-hearted.

Ingratitude! thou marble-breasted fiend,
More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child,
Than the sea monster. Shakespeare's King Lear.

MARCASSITE. n. f.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it, one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. Woodward.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton's Opticks.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallic state. Garr's Dispens.

MARCH. n. f. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars. Plutarch.

TO MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French, for varicare, Menage; from Mars, Junius.]

1. To move in military form.

Well march we on,
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. Shakespeare.

He marched in battle array with his power against Arphaxad. Judges, i. 13.

Maccabeus marched forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons. 2 Mac. xiii. 26.

My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Wept o'er me. Addison's Cat.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Plexirtus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Sidney.

Duch York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with his arm in arm? Shakespeare.

Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee,
When old in rising majesty,
Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. Prior.

The power of wisdom march'd before. Pope.

TO MARCH. v. a.

1. To put in military movement.
Cyrus marching his army for divers days o'er mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of his whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers. Boyle on Colours.

2. To bring in regular procession.
March them again in fair array,
And bid them form the happy day;
Th' happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate. Prior.

MARCH. n. f. [marcher, French.]

1. Military movement; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and sought in their shirts. Bacon's Warrent Spain.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their march to begin, and thither tend. Blackmore.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full rebounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine. Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

4. Signals to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly. Krollen.

5. Marches, without singular. [marcu, Gothic; meapc, Saxon; marche, French.] Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the piling borderers. Shakespeare.
The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them. Duques.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas. Davies on Ireland.

MARCHER. n. f. [from marcheur, Fr.] President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marcheis, and had royal liberties. Davies.

MARCHIONESS. n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio.] The wife of a marquis.

The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marquions of Pembroke. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
From a private gentlewoman he made me a marquionis, and from a marquionis a queen, and now he intend to crown my innocence with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon's Apology.

The lady marcheis, his wife, followed very diligently the timely preservation of her husband. Clarendon.

MARCHPANE. n. f. [massapane, French.] A kind of sweet bread, or biskuit.

Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like combs round in marchpane set. Sidney.

MARCHID. adj. [marcidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer part being melted away, the heat continuing its action. N 2

tion upon the diat and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Harvey.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
That to your marid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind. Dryden.

MARCOUR. n. f. [marcor, Lat.] Leannels; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in form, the extinction and marcour in others, it much abridgeth our days. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable, or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure. Harvey.

MARE. n. f. [mape, Saxon.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of couriers born of heavenly breed,
Whom Once stole from her celestial sire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth. Dryden.

2. [From Mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mab, his merry queen, by night
Beside, young folks that lie upright,
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure. Dayton.
Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach. Bacon's Natural History.

MARPSCHAL. n. f. [mareschal, French, derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horse.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And to be mareschal of France. Priest.

MARGARITE. n. f. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French] A pearl.

Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity, among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the marguerite or pearl. Peacocks on Blazoning.

MARGARITES. n. f. [bellis.] An herb. Ainsworth

MARGE. n. f. [margo, Latin; marge, French.]

MARGIN. n. f. [margo, Latin; marge, French.]

1. The border the brink; the edge; the verge.

He drew his flaming sword, and show'd
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took. Fairy Queen.
Never since
Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the brach'd margins of the sea. Shakspeare.
An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margins of the fatal flood. Dryden.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As much love in rhyme,
As would be cram'd up in a sheet of paper

MARKET. n. s. [anciently written mercat, of mercatus, Latin.]

1. A public time, and appointed place, of buying and selling.

It were good that the privilege of a market were given, to enable them to their defence: for there is nothing doth sooner cause civility than many market-towns, by reason the people repairing often thither will learn civil manners. Spenser.

Mistress, know yourself, down on your knees,
And thank Heav'n, fasting, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets. Shakespeare.

They counted our life a pastime, and our time here a market for gain. Wisd. xv. 12.

If one bushel of wheat and two of barley will, in the market, be taken one for another, they are of equal worth. Locke.

Whom nothing can procure,

When the wind would turn bias from his will,

To writhle his limbs, and then e, not mend the ill:

This is the marksmen, safe and sure,

Who still is right, and prays to be so still. Herbert.

An ordinary marksmen may know certainly when he shoots let wide at what he aims. Dryden.

MARL. n. s. [marl, Welsh; mergel,

Dutch; marga, Latin; marl, marne,

French; in Saxon, meyr is marrow, with an allusive signification, marls being the fatness of the earth.]

Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its enriching quality by any product. Marl is supposed to be fertile from its fat and oily quality. Stret.

We understand by the term marls simple native

earths, less heavy than the bole or clays, not so and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water. Hill.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness,

and not heating the ground too much. Bacon.

Uneasy steps

Over the burning marl, not like those steps

On heaven's azure. Milton.

Thy purpose marriage, lend me word to-morrow.

Shakspere.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself. Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be in marriage join'd with beautiful Emily. Dryden.

MARRIAGE is often used in composition.

In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases.

Addison's Spectator.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine.

Shakspere.

To these, whom death again did wed,
This grave's the second marriage bed,
For though the hand of fate could force
'Twixt soul and body a divorce,

It could not sever man and wife,
Because they both liv'd but one life. Crispian.

There on his arms and once lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.

Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber.

Job. vi. 16.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fether his fickleness, but, before the marriage-day appointed, he had taken to Baccha, of whom she complained. Sidney.

Virgin awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.

Give me, to live and die

A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie. Dryden.

of outward harbingers.

Sidney.

To MARSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or found.

Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the director of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army.

Glennville's St. p. 5.

Archives look'd not with so pleas'd a face,
In num'ring o'er his future Roman race,
And marshalling the heroes of his name,
As, in their order, next to light they came.

Dryd.

2. To lead as an harbinger.

Thou *marshal*st me the way that I was going.

Feed

With delicacies of leaves and marshy weed.

Dryden.

MART. n. f. [contracted from market.]

1. A place of publick traffick.

Christ could not suffer that the temple should serve for a place of mart, nor the apostle of Christ that the church should be made an inn.

Hooker.

If any born at Ephesus
Be seen at Syracusan *mart*s and fairs,
He dies.

Shakspeare.

Prezichel, in the description of Tyre, and the exceeding trade that it had with all the East as the only mart town, reciteth both the people with whom they commerce, and also what commodities every country yielded.

R. High.

Many come to a great mart of the best horses.

Turnple.

The French, since the accession of the Spanish monarchy, supply with cloth the best mart we had in Europe.

Addison.

2. Bargain; purchase and sale.

I play a merchant's part,
And venture madly on a desperate mart.

Shakspeare.

3. Letters of mart. See MARK.

To MART. v. a. [from the noun.] To traffick; to buy or sell.

Sooth, when I was young I wou'd have ranfack'd
The pedlar's sicken treasury, you've let him go,
And nothing marted with him.

Shakspeare's Win. Tale.

Cassius, you yourself

Do sell and mart your office for gold

To undeservers.

Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

It ne shall think it fit,

A faucy stranger in his court to mart,

As in a flew.

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

A churchwarden, to express St. Martin's in the fields, caused to be engraved, on the communion cup, a martin, a bird like a swallow, sitting upon a mole-hill between two trees.

Peacham.

MARTIAL. adj. [martial, Fr. martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my feeble breast
Come gently, but not with that mighty rage
Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infect,
And hearts of great heroes dost enrage.

Fairy Qu.

The queen of martials,

And Mars himself conducted them.

Chapman.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far Southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region.

Bacon.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;
But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,
Each other's poize and counterbalance are.

Dryden.

2. Having a warlike shew; tuising war.

See

His thousands, in what martial equipage
They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arm,
Of equal dread in flight or in pursuit.

Milton.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,
How martial muck every bosom warms!

Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

Shakspeare's Henry V.

When country folke do dainties tucke.

Tusser.

MARTINET. n. f. [martinet, French.]

MARTLET. n. f. A kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,

The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that heaven's breath
Smells woovingly here. No jutting fucet, Buttice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
The air is delicate.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;

Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train.

Dryden.

MARTNETS. n. f. They are small lines fastened to the leech of the sail, to bring that part of the leech which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled.

One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn;
it not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced.

Nearest heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight.

Dryden.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ; but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death.

South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered.

Addison.

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God.

Thomson.

To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue, or true profession

2. To murder; to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.

Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats. Shak.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your race would wear not patches, but a cloud.

Martyr'd with the gout.

MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr; testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom?

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom.

Herod, whose unblest Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness? tore A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast, The blooms of martyrdom.

Wais, hitherto the only argument Heroick deem'd, chief mast'ry to distrust, With long and tedious havock, fabled knights In battles feign'd; the better fortitude Of patience and herouick martyrdom Unlangu.

What mists of providence are th' f? So faints, by supernatural pow'r set free, Are left at last in martyrdom to die.

MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Latin.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrlogy we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out.

MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrlogy.

MARVEL. n. f. [merveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could spy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour, you cowardly rascal! Shaksp. King Lear.
No marvel

My lord protector's hawks do towie so well. Shak.
MARVEL of Peru. A flower. Anyworth.
To MARVEL. v. a. [merveiller, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

You make me marvel.
Hark, I do not only marvel what thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied.

The army marvelled at it.
The country marvelled at thee for thy long, pious, and parables.

MARVELLOUS. adj. [merveilleux, Fr.] 1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing. She has a marvelous white hand, I must confess.

This is the Lord's doing: it is marvelous in our eyes.

2. Surpassing. The marvelous include wh'tever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

3. The marvelous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

MARVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvel.] Wonderfully; strangely. You look not well, signior Antonio; you have too much respect upon the world;

They lose it that do buy it with much care.

Believe me, you are marvelously chang'd. Shaksp.
The encouragement of his too late successes, with which he was marvelously elated. Clarendon.

MARVELLOUSNESS. n. f. [from marvelous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MAS'CULE. adj. [masculin, French; masculinus, Latin.]

1. Male; not female.

Play God, she prove not masculine ere long!

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operation upon nature, being the feminine. Peacbam on Drawing.

O! why did God, Creator wife, that peopl'd highest heav'n With spirit masculine, create at last This novelty on earth, this fair defect Of nature?

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MAS'CULELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.

Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely, And play the orator.

MAS'CULENESS. n. f. [from masculine.] Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH. n. f. [masche, Dutch.]

1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small meshes, that a bee cannot get through.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished, or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, of mascher, French.]

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well, and stir it for half an hour till the water is very hot, and mix it the horse lukewarm; this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressur would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all thing else apieces.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was put in the first mashing tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing tub.

MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]

1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now Love pulled off his mask, and shew'd his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass, And throw her sun capelling mask away, The air hath stain'd the roses in her cheek, And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd, Why dost thou strive the cautious shame to hide, By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride?

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night?

4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild buffle.

They in the end agreed, That at a masque and common revelling, Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed.

This thought might lead me through this world's vain mists, Content, though blind, had I no other guide.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks.

To MASK. v. a. [maqueter, French.]

1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow of such errors as go masked under the cloak of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them.

Wherein thou see'st me masked.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she; But being mask'd he was not sure.

The old Vatican Tenace has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises, and I saw an antique statue mask'd, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the Eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love, Masking the business from the common eye, For sunny weighty reasons.

As when a piece of wotton lawn, A thin aerial veil, is drawn O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide, More sweetly shows the blushing bide: A soul whose intellectual beams No mists do mask, no lazy steams.

To MASK. v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't.

What masking stuff's here!

At short habits, and a borrow'd name, Continue to hide my plenitude of shame.

2. To be disguised any way.

MASKER. n. f. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,

That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,

To revel it with him and his new bride.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay, Like faeries, till the cock crow them away.

MASIN. adj. [corrupted from miscellaneous.] Composed of various kinds; as maslin bread, made of wheat and rye.

MASON. n. f. [maçon, Fr. machio, low Latin.] A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth.

A mason

A mason that makes a wall, meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work.

Mae.

MASONRY. n. f. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.

MASQUERADE. n. f. [from masque.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by day, the whisper in the dark? Pop.

2. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade. Felton.

TO MASQUERADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

MASQUERADE. n. f. [from masquerade.]

A person in a mask.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masquerades under the vizard of friends. L'Estrange.

MASS. n. f. [masse, French; massa, Lat.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opticks.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outskides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A large quantity.

Thy tempestuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakespeare.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the masses of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groups, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear,
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd, and black, if brought too near. Prior.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addis.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move. Dryden.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio. Swift.

If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbutnot.

Vol. II.

6. [Missa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

Burnished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert herein.

Pearson on Drawing.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years.

Atterbury.

TO MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

Their massing furniture they took from the law, left having an altar and a priest, they should want vestments. Holker.

TO MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven. Hayward.

MASSACRE. n. f. [massacre, French, from massare, Italian.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre

Make they, but of their brethren, men of men.

M. n.

Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare.

TO MASSACRE. v. a. [massarer, Fr. from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family.

Shakespeare.

Christian religion, now crumbled into factions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermitte us, or we recover so much liberty as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love.

Bay of Ptery.

After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.

MASSICOT. n. f. [French.]

Massicot is cerusi calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold coloured massicot still more. Trevoux.

MASSINESS. } n. f. [from massy, mass-]
MASSIVENESS. } five. Weight; bulk; ponderousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Macaulay.

MASSIVE. } adj. [massif, Fr.] Heavy;
MASSY. } weighty; ponderous; bulky; continuous.

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakespeare's Temp.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine.

Governor of the Tongue.

No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No swearing slaves with massive dishes dress'd.

Dryden.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their order to the deluge.

Woodward.

If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.

Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. P. p.

MAST. n. f. [mast, mât, French; mayr, Saxon.]

1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakespeare.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Turl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel mor'd. Dryden's Ham.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech. It has in this sense no plural termination.

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous homewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mels before you. Sh. T. Tim. of Ah.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lifting than those that bear fruits, a oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast.

L'Estrange's Fables.

The breaking down an old trunk of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, beside the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit. Temple's Miscell. poet.

Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palmer glide;
On leaves, and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.

Dryden.

MASTED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MASTER. n. f. [meester, Dutch; maistre, French; magister, Latin.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself,
Are yours, my lord. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
Take up thy master. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;
The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. A duetor; a governor.

If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest. Ecclus. xxxii. 1.
O thou, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song. Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing.

An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyrick on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master. Dryden's Dufrisoey.

4. A lord; a ruler.

Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house. Guardian.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minerva's throne,
Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own. Pope.

Lucile.

The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master. Philips.

5. Chief; head.

Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace. Shakespeare.
As a wise master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. 1 Cor. iii. 10.

The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots. Mortimer's Husband.

6. Possessor.

When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally sit myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage. Addison.

The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone. Addison.

7. Commander of a trading ship.

An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks, a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankruptcies. Albani's Schoolmaster.

A sailor's wife had chefnuts in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' the Tyger. Shakespeare.

8. One uncontrolled.

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

9. A compellation of respect.

Master doctor, you have brought those drugs. Shakespeare.

Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king. Shakespeare.

Masters play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid good morrow. Shakespeare.

10. A young gentleman.

If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice. Dryden.

Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun; miss lodg'd in a garret, exposed to the north wind. Arbarknot.

Where there are little masters and mistresses in a house, they are impediments to the divisions of the servants; the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales. Swift.

11. One who teaches; a teacher; correlative to scholar or learner.

Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching, for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master. Ben Jonson's Discoverie.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning. South.

Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars, but smooth their way, and help them forwards. Locke.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.

The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below. Davies.

Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed. Dryden.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own. Dryden.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession. Culver.

No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it. Locke.

MATCH. n. f. [meche, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mico, to shine,

Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures,

from the Saxon maca, a companion,

because a match is companion to a gun.]

1. Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Baron.

He made use of trees as matches to set Druidina a fire. Hecate.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Bye.

2. [From μαχη, a fight; or from maca,

Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the wantons with our woes,

And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakspeare.

The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.

A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.

3. [From maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects. Addison.

The old man has met with his match. Spéttin.

The natural shame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.

4. One that suits or tallies with another.

5. A marriage.

The match

Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, becoming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakspeare.

Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making. Boyle.

With him the stove to join Lavinia's hand,

But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.

All creatures else are much unworthy thee,

They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

MATCHABLE. adj. [from match.]

1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Be but in heaven matchable to none;
Why did ye stoop unto lowly state? Spenser.

2. Correspondent.

Those at land that are not mat balle with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea.
Woodward's Natural History.

MATCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Having no equal.

'Tis his happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse.
Dryden.

MATCHLESSLY. adv. In a manner not to be equalled.

MATCHLESSNESS. n. f. [from matchless.]
State of being without an equal.

MATCHMAKER. n. f. [from match and make.]

1. One who contrives marriages.

If you should carry me, or no;
And would have had him and his imp,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras.

2. One who makes matches to burn.

MATE. n. f. [from maca, Saxon; maat, Dut.]

1. A husband or wife.

I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy match for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Fairy Q.

2. A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakspeare.
My competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakspeare.
You knew me once no mate
For you, there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton.

Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud,
Hear it thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryden.

Leave thy bride alone
Go, leave her with her maiden mate to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.

3. The male or female of animals.

Part tingle, or with mate,

What vengeance on the raving fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mate devout. Johnson.

5. One that eats at the same table

6. The second in subordination in a ship:
as, the master's mate; the surgeon's mate.

TO MATE. v. [from the noun.]

1. To match; marry.

Entangle make in your hapless joys,
And of myself now I as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Fairy Queen.

The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakspeare's As You Like It.

Be equal to.
He from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
Has the matchless sheaf mated the skies. Dryden.

Parnassus is its name; whose forked life
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:

High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.

3. 'To oppose; to equal.

I 'th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

4. [Matter, French; matar, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush. Not in use.

That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.

My sense the 'as mated, and amaz'd my sight.

Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakspeare.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind and mate the weaker fort of minds. Bacon's Natural History.

MATERIAL. adj. [from materiel, Fr. materia, Lat.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses, which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.

That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.

2. Important; momentous; essential: with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.

Hold them for catholics or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material. Hooker.

What part of the world forever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ. H. Ker.

It may be said to be secret meaning and intend therein, very material to the state of that government. St. John.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material. Wingate.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.
Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Natural History.

I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme. Dryden.
As for the more material faults of writing, though
I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.

I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.

In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.

3. Not formal: as, though the material action was the same, it was formally different.

MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materiaux, Fr.]
The substance of which any thing is made.

The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africa, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown.

David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dip-t his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. Scrub.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples, the art of man might make of some such material as the stone asbestos, which being once enkindled will burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The materials of that building very furiously ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tilletson.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift.

MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.]
One who denies spiritual substances.

He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryden.

MATERIALITY. n. f. [from materialité, Fr.
from material.] Corporeity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals, and to each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.

MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.

I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.

2. Not formally.

Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South.

3. Importantly; essentially.

All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially; as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. St. John on Ireland.

MATERIALNESS. n. f. [from material.]
State of being material.

MATERIATE. adj. [from materiatu, Lat.]

MATERIALIZED. adj. Consisting of matter.

After long enquiry of things immaterial in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Natural History.

MATERIATION. n. f. [from materia,
Lat.] The act of forming matter.

Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brown.

MATERNAL. adj. [from materna, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles;
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.

MATERNITY. n. f. [from maternité, Fr. from materna, Lat.] The character or relation of a mother.

MAT-PELON. n. f. [matter, to kill, and felon, a thief.]

A species of knap-weed growing wild.

MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathema-
MATHEMATICK. } ticus, Latin.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The East and West

Upon the globe, a mathematick point

Only divides: thus happiness and misery,

And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham.

It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.

I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematick evenness. Bentley.

MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sunbeams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley.

MATHEMATICIAN. n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien, Fr.] A man versed in the mathematics.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Addison's Spectator.

MATHEMATICKS. n. f. [μαθηματικά.] That science which contemplates what ever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.

The mathematicks and the metaphysics—
I all to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

See mystery to math math math fly.
MATHES. n. f. [chamaemelum sylvestre] An herb. Ainsworth.

The glow worm shew, the matin to be near,

And gins to pale his intellectual fire. Shakespeare.

MAT'INS. n. f. [matins, French.] Morning worship.

The winged choristers began

To chirp their matins. Cleveland.

By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques; the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whole

the reliques are. Stillinger.

That he should raise his mitred crest on high,

And clap his wings, and call his family

To sacred rites; and vex the ethereal powers

With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.

MAT'RASS. n. f. [matras, French]

Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure. Wynn.

Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennach'd tulips and sanunculus's, covering them with mar-af-fet.  Evelyn's Calendar.

MAT'RICE. n. f. [matrix, Latin.]

1. The womb; the cavity where the foetus is formed.

If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.

Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodward.

MAT'RONLY. adj. [matron and like.] Elderly; ancient.

The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. L'Estrange.

MATRO'SS. n. f.

Matro'ss, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in taverling, punning, firing, and loading them: they carry fire locks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.

MAT'ITER. n. f. [matiere, French; matéria, Latin]

1. Body; substance extended.

If then the soul another soul do make, Because her power is kept within a bound,

She must some former stuff of matier take,

But in the soul there is no matier found. Dante.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matier is solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space, as most conduced to the end for which he formed them, and that those primitive particles being solid, are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even to very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Newton.

Some have a mention of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matier or body. Waller's Logic.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matier of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

The subject or matier of laws in general is thus forth constant, which matier is that for the ordering when or laws were instituted. Hobbes.

I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much to light for the matier. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Son of God, Saviour of Men! Thy name

Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milton.

It is matier of the greatest affrontment to observe the common boldness of men. Dancy's Poet.

I shall turn

Full fraught with joyful telling of these works,

New matier of his praise, and of our songs. Dryden.

This is to certain in true philosophy, that it is matier of affrontment to me how it came to be doubted. Cory.

4. The whole; the very thing supposed.

He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matier, that but very few escaped. Stilling.

5. Affair; business; in a familiar sense.

To help the matier, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon's Natural History.

Matier succeeded so well with him, that every body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. L'Estrange.

Never was any thing gotten by seniority and both in matier of profit or reputation. L'Estrange.

A town was reasoning the matier with a flag, why he should run away from the dogs. L'Estrange.

Some

Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spectator.

If chance herself should vary,
Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.

6. Cause of disturbance.

Where art thou? What's the matter with thee?
Shakespeare.

What's the matter, you dissentious rogues,
That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
Make yourselves scabs? Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?
—Marry, Sir, I have matter in my head against you. Shakespeare.

If the craftsmen have a matter against any man,
the law is open, let them implead one another. Bacon.

In amies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the grofs, it would go on the other. Bacon.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor show doth better. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

And please yourselves this day,
No matter from what hands you have the play. Dryden.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
No matter which, so neither of them lye,
From steepe Ortyx top to Pilus drove His herd Dryden.
Pleased or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
The first who dares be angry breathes his last. Granville.

9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.

The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Sidon.

Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter? Plato replied, But custom is no small matter. Bacon.

Many times the things deduced to judgment may be meum and tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of estate.
I call matter of estate not only the parts of love reignty, but whatsoever introduced by any great alteration, or dangerous precedent. Bacon's Essays.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquisition, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength. Bacon.

10. Question considered.

Upon the whole matter, it is absurd to think that conscience can be kept in order without frequent examination. South.

11. Space or quantity nearly computed.

Away he goes to the market-town, a matter of seven miles off, to enquire if any had seen his ass. L'Estrange.

I have thoughts to tarry a small matter in town,
to learn somewhat of your lingo. Corneille.

12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration.

In an inflamed tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated, I opened
it. Wise's Surgery.

13. Upon the Matter. A low phrase now out of use. Considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly.

In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and tame their competitors' aspect, so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to rising. Bacon's Essays.

Upon the matter, in these prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spoke without book I now read. Ribbop Sanderfen.
The elder, having consumed his whole fortune,

when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it. Clarendon.

Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in hoise, but were upon the matter equal in foot. Clarendon.

If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wife man as a demonstration. Tillotson.

To MATTER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be of importance; to import. It is used with only it, this, that, or what,
before it.

It matters not, so they deny it all;
And can but carry the lye constantly. Ben Jonson.
It matters not how they were called, so we know who they are. Locke.

If Petrarch's muse did Laura's wit rehearse;
And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse;
She hopes from you—Pox take her hopes and fears,
I plead her sex's claim: what matters hers? Prior.

2. To generate matter by suppuration.
Deadly wounds inward bleed, each slight fore matter. Sidney.

The herpes beneath matter'd, and were drest up with common epulotics. Wise's Surgery.

To MATTER. v. o. [from the noun.]

To regard; not to neglect: as, I matter not that calumny.

Laws my Pindarick parents matter'd not. Brown.

MATTERY. adj. [from matter.] Puru-lent; generating matter.

The putrid vapour, colligate the phlegmatick humours of the body, which transfixing to the lungs, causes their matterly cough. Hartley on Cough.

MATTOCK. n. f. [mattuc, Saxon.]

1. A kind of toothed instrument to pull up weeds.

Give me that mattock, and the wrenching iron. Shakespeare.

2. A pickaxe.

You must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakespeare.
The Turks laboured with mattocks and pickaxes to dig up the foundation of the wall. Knolles.

To dig in ruins was more to be expected from earthquakes than corrosive waters, and con-demneth the judgment of Xerxes, that wrought through mount Athos with mattocks. Brown.

MATRESS. n. f. [matras, Fr. attras, Welsh.] A kind of quilt made to lie upon.

Their mattresses were made of feathers and straw, and sometimes of furs from Gaul. Abubot.

Nor will the raging fever's fire abate
With golden canopies and beds of state;
But the poor patient will as soon be found
On the hard mattress, on the mother ground. Dryden.

MATURATION. n. f. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. The state of growing ripe.

One of the causes why grains and fruits are more nourishing than leaves, is, the length of time in which they grow to maturation. Bacon.

There is the maturation of fruits, the maturation of drinks, and the maturation of imposthumes; as also other maturations of metals. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of ripening.

We have no heat to spare in Summer; it is very well if it be sufficient for the maturation of fruits. Bentley.

3. [In physick.] Maturation, by some physical writers, is applied to the suppuration of excrementitious or extrava-sated juices into matter, and differs from concoction or digestion, which is the raising to a greater perfection the alimentary and natural juices in their proper canals. Quincy.

MATURATIVE. adj. [from maturo, Lat.]

1. Ripening; conducive to ripeness.

Between the tropicks and equator their second Summer is hotter, and more maturative of fruits than the former. Brown.

2. Conducive to the suppuration of a sore.

Butter is maturative, and is profitably mixed with anodynes and suppuratives. Wise's Surg.

MATU'RE. adj. [maturus, Latin.]

1. Ripe; perfected by time.

When once he was mature for man;
In Britain where he was he,
That could stand up his parallel,
Or rival object be. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Their prince is a man of learning and virtue, mature in years and experience, who has seldom vanity to gratify. Addison.
Mature the virgin was of Egypt's race,
Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty dock'd her face. Prior.

How shall I meet, or how account the sage,
Unskill'd in speech, nor yet mature of age. Pope.
2. Brought near to completion.

Thus lies glowing, and is mature for the violent breaking out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Here I th' sands
Thee I'll rake up, and in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the light
Or the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. Well disposed; fit for execution; well-digested.

To MATU'RE. v. a. [maturo, Latin.]

1. To ripen; to advance to ripeness.

Pick an apple with a pin full of holes, not deep,
and imbed it a little with sack, to see if the virtual heat of the wine will not mature it. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To advance towards perfection.

Love indulg'd my labours past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last. Pope.

MATU'RELY. adv. [from mature.]

1. Ripely; completely.

2. With counsel well-digested.

A prince ought maturely to consider, when he enters on a war, whether his coffers be full, and his revenues clear of debts. Swift.

3. Early; soon. A latinism.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians; that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial, and receiving us more maturely into those everlasting habitations above. Bentley.

MATU'RITY. n. f. [maturité, Fr. matu- ritas, Latin.] Ripeness; completion.

It may not be unfit to call some of young years to train up for those weighty affairs, against the time of greater maturity. Bacon.

Impatient nature had taught motion

To start from time, and cheerfully to fly
Before, and seize upon maturity. Crahe.

Various mortifications must be undergone, many difficulties and obstructions conquered, before we can arrive at a just maturity in religion. Rogers.

MAUDLIN. adj. [Maudlin is the corrupt appellation of Magdalen, who is drawn by painters with swollen eyes, and dis-ordered look; a drunken countenance, seems to have been so named from a ludicrous resemblance to the picture of Magdalen.] Drunk; fuddled; approaching to ebriety.

And the kind maudling crowd melts in her praise. Southern.

She largely, what she wants in words, supplies
With maudlin eloquence of trickling eyes. Rescommon.

MAUDLIN.

The flowers of the maudlin are digested into loose umbels. Miller.

MA'UGRE. adj. [malgré, French.] In spite of; notwithstanding. It is now out of use.

This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe;
Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Shakespeare.

Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence;

Thy valour, and thy heart; thou art a traitor.

Shakespeare.

I through the ample air, in triumph high
Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell! and show
The powers of darkness bound. Milton's Par. Lost.

Maugre all which, 'twas to stand fast
As long as monarchy should last. Hudibras.

He prophesied of the success of his gospel;
which, after his death, immediately took root, and spread itself every-where, maugre all opposition or persecution. Burnet.

MA'VIS. n. f. [mauvais, French.] A thrush, or bird like a thrush. An old word.

The world that cannot deem of worthy things,
When I do praise her, say I do but flatter;

So doth the cuckoo, when the mauvais sings,
Begin his wife's note apart to clear. Spenser.

In birds, kite, have a resemblance with hawks, and black-birds with thrushes and mauvais.

Bacon's Natural History.

To MAUL. v. a. [from malleus, Latin.]

To beat; to bruise; to hurt in a coarse or butcherly manner.

Will he who saw the soldier's mutton sit,
And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list,
To witness truth? Dryden's Juvener.

Once ev'ry week poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is given, and strait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go? Dryden.

I had some repute for prose;
And, till they drove me out of date,
Could maul a minister of state. Swift's Miscel.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy piously stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack and maul.

Pope.

MAUL. n. f. [malleus, Latin.] A heavy hammer; commonly written Mall.

A man that beareth false witness is a maul, a sword, and sharp arrow. Prov. xxv. 18.

French.] A hand-basket.

To MAUNDER. v. n. [maudire, Fr.] To grumble; to murmur.

He made me many visits, maunding as if I had done him a discourtesy in leaving such an opening.

Wife's Surgery.

MA'UNDERER. n. f. [from maunder.] A murmurer; a grumbler.

MAUNDY-THURSDAY. n. f. [derived by Spelman from mande, a hand-basket, in which the king was accustomed to give alms to the poor: by others from dies
mandati, the day on which our Saviour gave his great mandate, 'that we should love one another.] The Thursday before Good-friday.

MAUSOLEUM. n. f. [Latin; mausolee, French.] A name which was first given to a stately monument erected by his queen Artimisia to her husband Mausolus, king of Caria.] A pompous funeral monument.

Maw. n. f. [maga, Saxon; maeghe, Dut.]

1. The stomach of animals, and of human beings, in contempt.

So oft in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maw; a iprat new stomach brings.

Sidney.

We have heats of dungs, and of bellies and
maws of living creatures, and of their bloods.

Bacon.

Though plenteous, all too little seems,
To stuff this maw, this vast unhidebound corps.

Milton.

The serpent, who t' maw obscene had fill'd,
The branches in his curl'd embraces held. Dryden.

2. The craw of birds.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill;
their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it down by degrees into the stomach, where it is ground by two strong muscles, in which action they are assisted by small stones,
which they swallow for the purpose. Ashmole.

MA'WKISH. adj. [perhaps from maw.]

Apt to give satiety; apt to cause loathing.

Flow, Wellfed! flow, like thine inspirer beer,
So sweetly mawish, and so smoothly dull. Pope.

MA'WKISHNESS. n. f. [from mawish.]

Aptness to cause loathing.

MA'WMET. n. f. [for mammet; from mam or mother.] A puppet, anciently an idol.

MA'WMISH. adj. [from mawm or mawmet.] Foolish; idle; nauseous.

It is one of the most nauseous, mawmish mortifications, for a man to have to do with a punctual, fincal fop. L'Estrange.

Maw-worm. n. f. [maw and worm.]

Ordinary gut worms loosen, and slide off from, the intern tunick of the guts, and frequently creep into the stomach for nutriment, being attracted thither by the sweet chyle, whence they are called stomach or maw-worms. Harvey on Consumption.

MA'XILLAR. } adj. [maxillaris, Latin.]

MA'XILLARY. } Belonging to the jaw-bone.

The greatest quantity of hard substance continued is towards the head, there is the skull, the teeth, and the maxillary bones. Bacon.

MA'XIM. n. f. [maxime, Fr. maximum, Lat.] An axiom; a general principle;
a leading truth.

This maxim out of love I teach. Shakespeare.

It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquest, till settled, are rather matters of burden than strength. Bacon.

Yet, as in duty bound, they serve him on;
Nor ease, nor wealth, nor life itself regard,
For 'tis their maxim, love is love's reward. Dryd.

That the temper, the sentiments, the morality of men, is influenced by the example and disposition of those they converse with, is a reflexion which has long since pass'd into proverb, and been ranked among the standing maxims of human wildom. Rogers.

MAY, auxiliary verb, preterite might.

[magan, Sax. maghen, Dutch.]

1. To be at liberty; to be permitted; to be allowed: as, you may do for me [per me licet] all you can.

a man, desirous to improve himself, may get into the conversation of persons of condition.

Locke on Education.

2. To be possible; in the words may be.

It may be, I shall otherwise bethink me. Skat.

3. To be by chance.

Be the workmen what they may be, let us speak of the work. Bacon's Essays.

How old may Phillis be, you ask;
Whose beauty thus all hearts engages?
To answer is no easy task,
For she has really two ages. Prior.

4. To have power.

This also tendeth to no more but what the king
may do: for what he may do is of two kind-
; what he may do as just, and what he may do as possible. Bacon.

Make the most of life you may. Bourne.

5. A word expressing desire.

May you live happily and long for the service of your country. Dryden's Dedication to the Aeneid.

MAY-be. Perhaps; it may be that.

May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenge's heart, words well dispos'd
Have secret powers t' appease inflamed rage.

Fairy Queen.

May-be the amorous count solicits her
In the unwise purpose. Shakespeare.

'Tis nothing yet, yet all thou hast to give;
Then add thine may-be years thou hast to live.

Dryden.

What they offer is but may-be and shift, and scarce ever amount to a tolerable reason. Crabbe.

MAY. n. f. [Maius, Latin.]

1. The fifth month of the year; the confine of Spring and Summer.

May must be drawn with a sweet and unble countenance, clad in a robe of white and green, embroidered with daisies, hawthorns, and blue-bottles. Pucknam.

Hail! bounteous May, that dost inspire
Mirth and youth, and warm desire,
Words and groves are of thy dailings,
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing. Milton.

2. The early or gay part of life.

On a day, alack the day!
Love, whose month is over May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air.

Shakespeare.

Mays are May when they are maids,
But the sky changes when they are wives.

Shakespeare.

My leg.

Is in the very May month of his youth,
Ripe for exploits. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice rence, and his active practice,
His May of youth, and bloom of lusthood.

Shakespeare.

To MAY. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather flowers on May morning.

When merry May first early calls the morn,
With merry maids a maying they do go. Sidney.

sect.

He loves the May fly, which is bred of the cod-worm or caddis. Hutton's Angl.

MAY-GAME. n. f. [May and game.] Diversion; sport; such as are used on the first of May.

The king this while, though he seem'd to recount of the designs of Perkins but as a May-game, yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts. Bacon.

Like early lovers, whose unpractis'd hearts
Were long the May-game of malicious arts,
When once they find their jealousies were vain,
With double heat renew their fires again. Dryden.

MAY-LILY. n. f. [ephemeron.] The same with lily of the valley.

May-Pole.

MAY POLE. n. f. [May and pole.] Pole to be danced round in May.

Where the tall May-pole once o'er-look'd the stand.

MAY-WEED. n. f. [May and weed.] A species of chamomile, called also flinking chamomile, which grows wild.

The May-weed doth burne, and the thistle doth fret,
The nitches pull d'wnward both ric and the wheat.

MAYOR. n. f. [major, Lat.] The chief magistrate of a corporation, who, in London and York, is called Lord Mayor. When the king once heard it; out of anger, He sent command to the lord mayor strait To stop the rumour. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

The mayor locked up the gates of the city. Krolles.
Wouldst thou not rather chuse a small renown;
To be the mayor of some poor paltry town? Dryden.

MAYORALTY. n. f. [from mayor.] The office of a mayor.

It is incorporated with the mayoralty, and nameth burgesses to the parliament.

There was a sharp persecution against St. William Capel, for misgovernment in his mayoralty.

MAYORESS. n. f. [from mayor.] The wife of the mayor.

MAYZARD. n. f. [maschoire, Fr.] A jaw.

Now my lady Woin's chaplefs, and knockt about the mazard with a sexton's spade.

Where thou might'st fiddle without hazard
Of outrage to thy hide and mazard.

MAZE. n. f. [missen, Dutch, to mistake; maze, a whirlpool, Skinner.] 1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.

Circular bate of rising folds, that tower'd fold above fold, a furling maze.

The ways of Heaven are dark and intricate,
Puzzled with mazes and perplex'd with error,
Our understanding teaches them in vain.

He, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground.

2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty; perplexity.

He left in himself nothing but a maze of longings, and a dungeon of sorrow.

While they study how to bring to pass that region may seem but a misty maze, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purport for the same, who of purpose mistake God, the author thereof.

I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive and thrive as best I may.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high

Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate,
Fix'd fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wand'ring maze lost.

TO MAZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.

Much we I maz'd to see this monster-kind,
In hundred forms to change his fearful hue.

MAZY. adj. [from maze.] Perplexed with windows; confused

Flow from the marble fount the crisped brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With mazy error, under pendant shades,
Ran nether.

The lapidiferous chabote add the state
Of bits and bristles, taught the steed to bound
To run the race, and trace the mazy round.

MAZER. n. f. [maeser, Dutch, a knot of maple] A maple cup.

Then, lo! Perigot, the pledge which I plight,
A mazer ywrought of the maple ware,

Wherein is enshafed many a fair fight
Of bears and tygers that makes fierce war. Spenser.
Virgil observes, like Theocritus, a just decorum, both of the subject and person, as in the third pastoral, where one of his shepherds describes a bowl, or mazer, curiously carved.

M.D. Medicina doctor, doctor of physick.

1. The oblique case of I.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread an interdicted shore.

For me the fates severely kind, ordain
A cool suspence.

2. Me is sometimes a kind of ludicrous expletive.

He thrust me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table.

He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow

Made to my father, while his blood was poor.

I, acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs.

I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and,
with a thought, fell on the eleven I paid.

3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I: as, methinks.

Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.

MEACOCK. n. f. [mes coq, Skinner.] An uxorious or effeminate man.

MEACOCK. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.

'Tis a world to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curliest shew.

MEAD. n. f. [maebe, Saxon; methe Dutch; metb, German; hydromeli, Lat.]

A kind of drink made of water and honey.

Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach.

He sheers his over-burden'd sheep,
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jar.

MEAD. n. f. [maebe, Saxon.] Ground somewhat watery, not plow'd, but covered with grafs and flowers.

Mead is a word chiefly poetical.

Where all things in common do rest,
Come feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead?

A band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground.

Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads

Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish Nature with her best attire
Cloath the gay spring, the season of desire.

Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed.

MEADOW SATYRON. n. f. [colchicum, Lat.] A plant.

The meadow saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments; it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin.

MEADOW-SWEET. n. f. [ulmaria, Latin.] A plant.

MEAGER. adj. [maigre, French; macer, Latin.]

1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate.

Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an eagle's fit.

Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones.

Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meagre.

Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th'offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground;
And limping death, lish'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

2. Poor; hungry.

Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil.

To MEAGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make lean.

It cannot be, that I should be so shamefully betrayed, and as a man meager'd with long watching and painful labour, laid himself down to sleep.

MEAGERNESS. n. f. [from meager.]

1. Leanness; want of flesh.

2. Scarciness; bareness.

Poyning, the better to make compensation of the meagreness of his service in the wars by acts of peace, called a parliament.

A meake for the pease, and to swing up the backe.

MEAL. n. f. [male, Saxon, repast or portion]

1. The act of eating at a certain time.

Boaz said unto her, at meal time, Come eat, and dip thy morsel.

The quantity of aliment necessary to keep the animal in a due state of vigour, ought to be divided into meals at proper intervals.

2. A repast; the food eaten.

What strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?

Give them great meals of beet, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

They made me a miser's feast of happiness,
And could not furnish out another meal.

3. A part; a fragment.

That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meal, brought in and answered there.

4. [Mælepe, Saxon; meel, Dutch; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn

In the boiling and sitting of near fourteen years of such power and flavour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility.

An old weasel conveys himself into a meal tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them.

TO MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle; to mingle.

Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous.

MEALMAN. n. f. [meal and man] One that deals in meal.

MEALY. adj. [from meal.]

1. Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal; having the qualities of meal.

The mealy parts of plants dissolved in water make too vitid an aliment.

2. Besprinkled, as with meal.

With four wings, as all farinacious and mealy-winged animals, as butterflies and moths.

Like

Like a gay insect, in his summer shine,
The top light fluttering spreads his mealy wings.

Thomson.

MEALY-MOUTHED. adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed: but perhaps from the fore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to comminute their grain, must be fed with meal.] Soft mouthed; unable to speak freely.

She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed where nature speaks to plain.

L'Alfange.

MEALY-MOUTHEDNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Bashfulness; restraint of speech.

MEAN. adj. [mœne, Saxon.]

1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.

She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphilus; to mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her.

Sidney.

This fairest maid of fairer mind;

By fortune mean, in nature born a queen.

Sidney.

Let pale-face'd fear keep with the mean born man,

And find no harbour in a royal heart.

Shakespeare.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;

Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

Shakespeare.

2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.

The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,

More than I know the found of Marcus's tongue

From every meaner man.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Can you imagine I to mean could prove,

To save my life by changing of my love?

Dryden.

We fall, not to please men, not to promote any mean, worldly interest.

Smalbridge's Sermons.

3. Contemptible; despicable.

The Roman legions, and great Caesar found

Our fashions no mean foe.

Philips.

4. Low in the degree of any good quality; low in worth; low in power.

Some things are good, yet in so mean a degree of goodness, that many are only not disproved nor disallowed of God for them.

Hooker.

French wheat is bearded, and requireth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain.

Carew.

The lands be not holden of her majesty, but by a mean tenure in socage, or by knight's service at the most.

Bacon.

By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly,

he became able to dispense ten thousand pounds.

Davies on Ireland.

To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;

Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain.

Dryden.

I have sacrificed much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable.

Pope.

5. [Moyen, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.

He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean stature.

Sidney.

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lorry, mean, or lowly.

Milton on Education.

6. Intervening; intermediate.

In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain.

Kings, xviii. 45.

MEAN. n. f. [moyen, French.]

Vol. II.

1. Mediocrity; middle rate; medium.

He tempering goodly well

Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamant chains.

Spenser.

Of 'tis seen

Our mean securities, and our mere defects
Prove our commodities.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

'Temperance with golden square,

Between them both can measure out a mean.

Shakespeare.

There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist,

and out of which they never can depart.

Dryden.

But no authority of gods or men

Allow of any mean in poetic.

Roscommon.

Against her then her forces Prudence joins,

And to the golden mean herself confines.

Denham.

2. Measure; regulation. Not used.

The rolling sea resounding soft,

In his big base them fitly answer'd,

And on the rock the waves breaking aloft,

A solemn mean unto them measured.

Fanny Queen.

3. Interval; interim; mean time.

But fith this wretched woman overcome,

Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,

Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,

And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb.

Spenser.

4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.

Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety.

Sidney.

As long as that which Christians did was good,

and no way subject to just reproof, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the heathens conversion unto Christ.

Haller.

It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeeth incontinency, and alldgeth that his wits were not his own, in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him.

Haller.

I'll devote a mean to draw the Moor

Out of the way, that your converse and business

May be more free.

Shakespeare's Othello.

No place will please me so, no mean of death,

As here by Caesar and by you cut off.

Shakespeare.

Nature is made better by no mean,

But nature makes that mean, so over that art

Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art

That nature makes.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular: the singular is in this sense now rarely used.

The more base art thou,

To make such means for her as thou hast done,

And leave her on such slight conditions.

Shakespeare.

By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harrassed with a long march.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner.

Davies on Ireland.

Strong was their plot,

Their parties great, means good, the safety fit,

Their practice close, their faith suspected not.

Daniel.

By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes.

Spencer's Sermons.

Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view?

Locke.

A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good.

Arthurbury.

It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness.

Arthurbury.

6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.

7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; nor at all.

The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other.

Add. John on Italy.

8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desinenes.

Your means are slender, your waste is great.

Shakespeare.

For competence of life I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evil;

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

Give you advancement.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It is did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means.

Warton.

9. MEAN-TIME. } In the intervening

MEAN WHILE. } time: sometimes an adverbial mode of speech.

Mean-while

The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring

New heav'n and earth.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mean-while the rapid heav'n's rowl'd down the light.

And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night.

Dryden.

Mean-while her warlike brother on the sea

His waving streamers to the winds displays.

Dryden.

Mean-while, in shades of night Aeneas lies;

Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes.

Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,

And, as I see occasion, favour thee.

Addison's Cato.

The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths, mean-while the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and harrassed by inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence.

Swift.

1. To have in the mind; to purpose.

These delights if thou canst give,

Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

Milton.

2. To think; to have the power of thought.

And he who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,

Means not, but blunders round about a meaning.

Pope.

To MEAN. v. a.

1. To purpose; to intend; to design.

Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to save much people alive.

Gen. i. 20.

And life more perfect have attain'd than fate

Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.

Milton.

I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer

With double pleasure, first prepar'd by tea;

So loyal subjects often feast their prince,

Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.

Dryden.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.

When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover.

Exod. xii. 26.

I forsake an argument on which I could delight to dwell, I mean your judgment in your choice of friends.

Dryden.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over

Abel.

Locke.

MEANDER. n. f. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have teach'd into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and intestines of the body.

Hale.

'Tis well, that while mankind

Through fate's perverse meander errs,

He can imagin'd pleasures find,

To combat against real woes.

Pope.

While long ring rivers in meanders glide,

They scatter verdant life on either side;

P

The

The valleys smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace.

Blackmore.

Law is a bottomless pit. John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year, yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts.

Arbutnot.

MEANDROUS adj. [from meander.] Winding; fleuous.

MEANING n. s. [from mean.]

towards you.

2. Habitual intention.

Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair.

Rowson.

3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the muses nine.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away.

Pope.

No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience, and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other mean- ings to it which God Almighty never intended.

Swift.

4. Sense; power of thinking.

He was not spiteful though he wrote a satire,
For still there goes some meaning to ill-nature.

Dryden.

True no meaning puzzles more than wit.

Pope.

MEANLY adv. [from mean.]

1. Moderately; not in a great degree.

Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affected to set forward learning in others.

The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born.

Denham's Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.

Would you meanly thus rely
On power, you know, I must obey?

Prior.

4. Without respect.

Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something dehrable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them.

Watts's Logic.

MEANNESS n. s. [from mean.]

1. Want of excellence.

The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of Common Prayer hath nothing to do.

Hooker.

This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship.

Addison on Italy.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.

No other nymphs have title to men's hearts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts.

Waller.

Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good.

South.

3. Lowness of mind.

The name of mean has been reckoned to imply a certain mean of mind, as well as lowness of condition.

measure: as, a measure of herrings is five hundred.]

Ainsworth.

MEASLES n. s. [from measle, Latin.]

1. Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice.

Quincy.

My lungs

Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were life and mortal, as likewise the measles.

Arbutnot.

2. A disease of swine.

One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs tell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it;
nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed, the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot.

B. Junon's Discovery.

3. A disease of trees.

Fruit bearers are often infected with the measle,
by being scorched with the sun.

Mortimer's Hist.

MEASLED adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,

As e'er in measled pork was hatched;

Thou tail of worship, that dost grow

On rump of justice as it row.

Hudibras.

MEASLY adj. [from measles.] Scab-bed with the measles.

Last trotted forth the gentle swine,

To ease her against the stump,

And dismally was heard to whine,

All as the scrubb'd her measly rump.

Swift.

MEASURABLE adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments.

Bentley's Sermons.

2. Moderate; in small quantity.

MEASURABLENESS n. s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

MEASURABLY adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart.

Ecclesi. xxxi. 28.

MEASUREMENT n. s. [from measure, Fr. mesura,
Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A taylor's new,

Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble nasse

Had safely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of many a thousand.

Shakespeare's King John.

A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel.

Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured;
but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measure.

Holder.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure
he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt.

Arbutnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues.

Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence.

More.

I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insincere.

Glanville's Scyllis.

3. Proportion; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable therunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite.

Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet there is such a law.

Locke.

4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Shakespeare.

6. Allotment; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short
And every measure fail me.

We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

2 Cor. x. 13.

If else thou seek'st

Ought, not surpassing human measure, say, Milton.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stock, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves.

Tillotson.

7. Degree; quantity.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world.

There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings.

Taylor.

The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and confirmation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.

Burnet's Theory.

8. Proportionate time; musical time.

Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains.

Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport.

Shakespeare.

As when the stars in their ethereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance.

Dryden.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical, the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anchentury.

Shakespeare.

Now as our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.

Shakespeare.

11. Moderation; not excess.

O love, be moderate, stay thy excess;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure.

Isa. vi. 14.

12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is

Milton

Τῆς ἐν τῷ δευτέρῳ τελευτῆς τοῦ μέτρου ὁρίζου-σας τὴν ὁρίαν τοῦ μέτρου.

Lord make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am.

13. Any

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards.

Smallridge's Sermons.

14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measures, rather than the height of thought.

Dryden.

The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measures, should be the smoothest imaginable.

Pope.

15. Tune; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs and light foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet.

Spenser.

16. Mean of action; mean to an end.

The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error.

Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure; to be hardly treated.

TO MEASURE. v. a. [mesurer, Fr. men- suro, Lat.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Chionoea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory.

Bacon.

2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps.

Swiss, &c.

I'll tell thee all my whole device

At the park-gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day.

Shakspeare.

The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way.

Dryden.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy power! What thought can measure thee, or tongue

Relate thee?

Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To adjust; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires.

Taylor.

Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures
the value of the commodity he sells.

Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation.

Addison's Spectator.

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again.

MEASURELESS. adj. [from measure.]

Immeasurable; immeasurable.

He shut up in measureless content.

Shakspeare.

MEASUREMENT. n. s. [from measure.]

Mensuration; act of measuring.

MEASURER. n. s. [from measure.] One that measures.

MEASURING. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cat not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.

When lusty shepherds throw

The bar by tuens, and none the rest out-go

So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pasture lasts.

Waller.

MEAT. n. s. [met, French.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.

To his father he sent ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way.

Carnivore, and birds of prey, are no good meat;
but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pewees and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat.

Bacon's Natural History.

There was a multitude of excises; as, the vestigial maculli, a tax upon meat.

Arbuthnot.

2. Food in general.

Never words were music to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or carv'd.

Shakspeare's Errors.

Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats;
but God shall destroy both.

1 Cor. vi. 13.

MEATED. adj. [from meat.] Fed; fod-dered.

Strong oxen and horses, well meat and well clad,
Well meated and used.

Tusser's Husbandry.

MEATHE. n. s. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwi ebrius sum.] Drink, properly of honey.

For drink the grape

She crusher, inoffensive must, and meathes

From many a berry.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

MEAZLING. pari. generally called miz- zling.

The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and soaking rain, than in great showers.

Arbuthnot on Air.

MECHANICAL. } adj. [mechanicus, Lat. mechani- que, Fr. from μηχανη.]

MECHANICK. } mechani- que, Fr. from μηχανη.]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanics.

Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematics, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation.

Dryden.

The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these,
and such like questions.

Newton.

2. Skilled in mechanics; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.

Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not to walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession?

Shakspeare.

Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hew him with my cudgel.

Shakspeare.

Mechanick slaves,

With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view.

Shakspeare.

To make a god, a hero, or a king,
Descend to a mechanick dialect.

Reformation.

MECHANICK. n. s. A manufacturer; a low workman.

Do not bid me

Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate

Again with Rome's mechanicks.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanick, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil.

South.

MECHANICKS. n. s. [mechanica, Latin.]

Dr. Wallis defines mechanicks to be the geometry of motion, a mathematical science, which shows the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion.

Harris.

The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanicks, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons.

Watts's Impr. of the Mind.

Salmonus was a great proficient in mechanicks, and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder.

Broom.

MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanick.] According to the laws of mechani- cism.

They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically among the rest.

Ray.

Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics.

Newton.

Boyle.

MECHANISM. n. s. [mechanisme, Fr.]

1. Action according to mechanick laws.

After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substances.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

He acknowledged nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable.

Bentley.

2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabric.

MECHOCAN. n. s. [from the place.]

1. Moderate degree; middle rate.

Men of age feldom drive bufinefs home to the full period, but content themfelves with a med'ity of fuccels. Bacon.

There appear'd a fudden and marvellous conver-fion in the duke's cafe, from the moft exalted to the moft depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no med'ity.

Wotton.

He likens the med'ity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his ftore with great paufimony; but who, with fear of running into profufeneff, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

Dryden's State of Innocence.

Getting and improving our knowledge in fub-ftances only by experience and hiftory, is all that the weaknefs of our faculties in this ftate of med'ity, while we are in this world, can attain to.

Locke.

2. Moderation; temperance.

Left appetite, in the ufe of food, fhould lead

Corrad.

MELANCHOLY. n. f. [melancolie, Fr. from μαλάνος, and χολή.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli.

Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious, nor the lawyer's, which is politick; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and, indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Shakspere.

Moonstruck madness, moping melancholy. Milt.

3. A gloomy, penfive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him.

Sidney.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels.

Taylor's Holy Living.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you; What is it else but penury of soul, A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.

In those deep solitudes and awful cells, Where heav'nly penfive contemplation dwells, And ever musing melancholy reigns.

Pope.

South.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow, Thou'rt such a teity, touchy, pleasant fellow; Haft to much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,

Reverend.

There is no living with thee, nor without thee.

Addison.

TO MELLOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death, and more than so, my father; Even in the downfall of his mellow d years.

Shakspere.

The royal tree hath left us royal fruit, Which *mellow*d by the stealing hours of time, Will well become the seat of majesty.

Shaksp.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine The grapes to juice, and mellow it to wine.

Addison.

2. To soften.

They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April.

Merriman's Husb.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it.

Dryden.

TO MELLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now; Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay. To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay.

Donne.

MELLOWNESS. n. f. [from mellow.]

1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.

My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the fine apple. Daisy of Bades.

The spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,

But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use; So age a mature melancholy doth set

On the green promises of youthful heat. Danham.

2. Maturity; full age.

MELOCOTON. n. f. [melocotone, Spanish; malum cotanum, Latin.] A quince. Obsolete.

In apricot, peach, &c. melocotones upon a wall, the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacon.

MELODIOUS. adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.

Mountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow, Melodious murmurs, waibling tune his praise. Milton.

And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears, A more melodious than the spheres. Dryden.

MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.

MELODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness; musicalness.

MELODY. n. f. [melodia, Gr.] Musick; sweetness of sound

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely inspired poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in publick prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's heart, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Huiler.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Ephraim.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs, And husht with buzzing night flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfum'd chamber of the great, And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakespeare.

Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour The mazy-running soul of melody Into my void velle! Thomson's Spring.

MELON. n. f. [melon, Fr. melo, Lat.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber. Some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo, others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three seminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt lately, the cucumber, and the melons. Num. xi. 5.

MELON-THISTLE. n. f. [melocotus, Lat.] The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance. Miller.

TO MELT. v. a. [meltan, Saxon]

1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.

How they would melt me out of my last drop by drop, and live or fishermen's boots with me! Shakespeare.

When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Job. xiv. 2.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade, Nor heat could melt, nor melting storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted takes on brains, it is your master's fault who will not allow you a sufficient saucepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in piece, this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition, is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see That love was in the next degree: 'Twas but a kindred sound to move, For pity melted the third to love. Dryden.

Alas! the story melted away my soul. Addison.

4. To waste away.

Thou would'st have plung'd thyself In general rot, melted down thy youth In different beds of dirt. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

TO MELT. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalms.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time; The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime; While hunching their heads and soon decay, And whiter snow in minutes melted away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow milder, mild, or gentle.

I melted, and am not Of stronger earth than others. Shakespeare.

Lighten and Fortify; Albeit, they were flinty villains, bloody dogs, Melting with tenderness and mild compassion, Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakespeare.

This said, the mov'd assistants melted in tears. Dryden.

Melting into tears, the pious man Deplored so sad a sight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whither are they melted? Into the air; and what seem'd corporal Melted as breath into the wind. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Beauty is a witch, Against whose charms faith melted into blood. Shakespeare.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melted to heaviness; strengthen thou me. Psalms.

MELTER. n. f. [from melt.] One that melts metal.

Miso and Melting like a couple of foistwat melting, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

Thus the author attributes to the remembrance of the former melting, in not exhausting the ore. Dryden's Physico-Theology.

MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Zelma lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphos'd to the running river. Sidney.

MELTLE. n. f. A kind of fish.

MEMBRE. n. f. [membre, Fr. membrum, Lat.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matth.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Jam. iii. 5.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none, Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watts.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry, as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members should be great. Addison.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies. King Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.

Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

MEMBRANE. n. f. [membrane, Fr. membrana, Lat.]

A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction: they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth alter tear oblunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They obstruct and none Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars: Easier than an air with air, if spirits embrace, Total they mix. Milton.

The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [membranaceus, Fr. from membrana Latin.]

Consisting of membranes.

Lute strings, which are made of the membranaceous parts of the gut, strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.

Great concepts are raised of the involution or membranaceous covering called the yolk. Bacon.

Such birds as are membranaceous have no gizzard, or muscular, but a membranaceous stomach, that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranaceous stomach. Ray on Creation.

Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranaceous parts, are diuretics. Artus's Note.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs. Artus's Note on Animals.

MEMENTO. n. f. [Latin.] A memorial; notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes, yet he is but a man, and reasonable mementos may be useful. Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other people's deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? Leffing.

MEMOIRE. n. f. [memoire, French.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

Be our great master's future charge To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbutnot on Coins.

MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds, Which all men have surviving fame to gain, By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds, For she that this desires doth still remain. Davies.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In fight of what he duyst not once defend;
But basely fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey?
Dryden.

MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.]
In a manner worthy of memory.

MEMORANDUM. n. s. [Lat.] A note to help the memory.

I resolv'd to new pave every street, and entered a memoandum in my pocket-book accordingly.
Guardian.

Nature's fair table book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools.
Swift.

MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Lat.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial wanty kisses to it, Shak.peare.
May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Brown.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories.
Watts.

MEMORIAL. n. s.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wildom, some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr, many of all. Hooker.
A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Numb. xvi. 43.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials or memorials thereof in writings, yet all of them have not their original in writing, for some of those laws have obtained their force by memorials of oral use. Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserve'd
Memorials, where the might of Gabriel fought.
Milt. n.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. Swift.

Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince fid, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials or his own hand touching petitions. Brown.
Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Hayward.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

MEMORIALIST. n. s. [from memorial.]
One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord.
Spectator.

TO MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.]

1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed. Spenser.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part,
I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of misdeeds. Wotton.

2. To cause to be remembered.

They meant
To memorize another Golgotha. Shak.peare.
MEMORY. n. s. [memoire, Fr. memoria,
Lat.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence;
recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight.
Locke.

The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails. Addison's Spectator.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth! Shak.peare's Henry VI.

3. Time of knowledge.

Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How fast this world, and face of thing, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton.

4. Memorial; monumental record.

Be better suited;
These weeds are memorials of those woful hours:
I pray thee put them off. Shak.peare's King Lear.
A swan in memory of Cygnus shines,
The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs. Addison.

5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail to convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shak.peare's Macbeth.

MEN, the plural of man.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham.

For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards' valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart. Brown's War with Spain.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon.

MEN-PLEASER. n. s. [men and pleaser.]

One too careful to please others.

Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.

TO MENACE. v. a. [menacer, French.]

To threaten; to threaten.

Who ever knew the heavens menace us? Shak.peare.
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Shak.peare.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did I come with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shak.peare.
From this league
Pepp'd ha'ms that menace him. Shak.peare.

What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menace d if he dar'd to stay. Dryden.

MENACE. n. s. [menace, French; from the verb.] Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Trojans view the dusty cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden.

MENACER. n. s. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threatens.

Hence menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This root protects thy rashness. But begone!
Philips.

MENAGE. n. s. [French.] A collection
of animals.

I saw here the largest menage that I ever met with. Addison.

ME'NAGOCUE. n. s. [μῆνες and ἀγῶν.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menfes.

TO MEND. v. a. [emendo, Latin.]

1. To repair from breach or decay.

They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it.
Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend,
Nay, show his faults—but when would poets
mend a
Pope.

Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not *mend*d.
Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlook'd for; and ever it ments some, and imports others, and he that is helpen takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a woe. Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum flans of the fensons, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.
I though in some lands the goal is but short, yet it ments garden herbs and fruits. Montmor's Huffs.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; justice divine
Mends not her slow pace, for pray, or cryer.
Milton.

When upon the sand the traveller
Saw the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covets all the place.
Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.

TO MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.

MENDACITY. n. s. [from mendax, Lat.]
Falsehood.

In this delivery there were additional mendacities;
for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively laid, Ye shall surely die; but she, extenuating, replied, Let ye die. Brown.

MENDER. n. s. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.

What trade art thou? A mender that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad tools.
Shak.peare. Julius Caesar.

MENDICANT. adj. [mendicans, Latin.]

Begging; poor to a state of beggary.

Be not righteous over much, is applicable to those who, out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, who say they menace their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor and mendicant life. Fader.

MENDICANT. n. s. [mendicant, French.]

A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.

TO MENDICATE. v. a. [mendico, Lat.
mendier, Fr.] To beg; to ask alms.

MENDICITY. n. s. [mendicitas, Lat. mendicite, Fr.] The life of a beggar.

MENDS for amends.

Let her be as she is: if she be fair, 'tis the better for her; and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands. Shak.peare.

MENIAL. adj. [from meiny or man;
ment, Saxon, or mesnir, old French.]

1. Belonging to the revenue, or train of servants.

Two menial dogs before their master prest'd, Thus clad, and guarded thus, he feels his king's guest. Dryd. n's Enr.

2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.

The women attendants perform only the most menial offices. Gulliver's Travels.

MENIAL. n. f. [from menial, Latin.] One of the train of servants.

MENINGES. n. f. [from meninges, Latin.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater, the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated.

The brain being exposed to the air growth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges. Wigan.

MENOLOGY. n. f. [from menology, Greek; menologe, French.] A register of months.

In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time,
many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian:
the menology faith they were twenty thousand.

MENOW. n. f. [from phoxinus] commonly min-now. A fish.

MENSAL. adj. [from mensalis, Latin.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalized.

Conversation either mental or mensal. Cliff.
MENSTRUAL. adj. [from menstrual, Fr. menstruus, Lat.]

1. Monthly; happening once a month;
lasting a month.

She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to fourteen days and nights of our's. Bentley.

2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [menstrueux,
French.]

The dissents of the menstrual or strong water hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the menstrual. Bacon.

MENSTRUOUS. adj. [from menstruus, Lat.]

1. Having the catamenia.

O thou of late be lov'd,
Now like a menstruous woman art remov'd. Sanhys.

2. Happening to women at certain times.

Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstruous eruptions. Brown.
MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]

All liquors are called menstruums which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of impurities by infusion or decoction. Quincy.

Enquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Bacon.

White metalline bodies must be excepted, which,
by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstruums they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton Opt. b.

MENSURABLE. y. n. f. [from mensurabilis,
Fr.] Capable of being measured.

MENSURABLE. n. f. [from mensura, Latin.]
Measurable; that may be measured.

We measure our time by law and not by nature.
The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easy mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks.
Haller.

MENSURAL. adj. [from mensura, Lat.]
to measure.

TO MENSURATE. v. a. [from mensura, Latin.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURATION. n. f. [from mensura, Latin.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.

After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another pietist. Atterb.

MENTAL. adj. [from mentale, Fr. mentis, Lat.]
Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power
This eye shoots forth? How big imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

So deep the power of these ingredients pierc'd,
I was to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam now forc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate. Addison.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.
Locke.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
Of platonic forms, and mental powers. Pope.

Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them. Watts.

MENTALITY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body. Bentley.

MENTION. n. f. [from mention, Fr. mentio,

Misrmed by my side a loyal mud, Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Fanny Q.

To that general subjection of the land me that the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment. Spenser.

MISERNTERY. n. f. [miserntery; miserntere, French.] That round which the guts are convolved.

When the chyle passeth through the miserntery, it is mixed with the lymph. Antonie on Animals.

MISERNTICK. adj. [miserntique, Fr. from miserntery.] Relating to the miserntery.

They are carried into the glands of the miserntery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilates this chylous fluid, and four or five containing vessels, which, from the miserntick glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Chyne.

MESH. n. f. [maefche, Dutch; mache, old French: it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mafs.] The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.

The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, thorough which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carew.

Such a hare is noddle's youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. Shakespeare.

He spreads his subtle nets from fight, With twinkling glasses to betray

The larks that in the mesh light. Dryden.

Which all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink, Which through the cells of the fine straits sink: These all the channel'd fibres every way, For motion and sensation, still convey

The greatest portion of th' arterial blood, By the close structure of the parts withstood, Whole narrow meshes stop the grosser flood. Blackmore.

To MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to enlure.

The flie by chance mesh in her hair, By the bright radiance thrown From her clear eyes, rich jewels were, They so like diamond shone. Drayton.

MESHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of net-work.

Some build his house, but thence his issue bar, Some make his meshy bed, but leave his rest. Cowley.

Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat Their idle wings. Tronson.

MESLIN. n. f. [from mesler, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for mesellane. See MASLIN.] Mixed corn: as wheat and rye.

What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old dissimilitude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hickes.

If we take for the threshers ye mind for to have, Of wheat and of meslin unthresh'd go save. Taylor.

MESOLUCYSE. n. f. [mesolucy, Gr.] A precious stone, black, with a streak of white in the middle. Dia.

MISCOLOGARITHMS. n. f. [misco, logarithm, and arithm.] The logarithms of the cosines and tangents, so denominated by Keyler. Harris.

MESOMELAS. n. f. [mesomela, Gr.] A precious stone with a black vein parting every colour in the midst. Pailey.

MESOTIS. n. f. [probably misprinted for mesotie, mesotie, French.] Contempt: scorn.

Mammon was much displeas'd, yet not he chose But bow the rigour of his bill to mesotie, And thence him forward led, him further to entice. Spenser.

MISS. n. f. [mes, old French; mesio, Italian: missus, Latin; mes, Gothick; meze, Saxon, a dish.] A dish; a quantity of food sent to table together.

The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her table before you. Shakespeare. Tim. of Ath.

Now your travellers, He and his to thip at my worship's miss. Shakespeare. Tw. of Ath.

I had as lief you should tell me of a miss of porridge. Shakespeare. Tw. of Ath.

Herbs and other country misses, Which the neat-handed Phillis dresses. Milton.

Had either of the celines been cooked to their palates, they might have changed misses. Pope.

From him he next receives it thick or thin, As pure a miss almost as it came in. Pope.

To MISS. v. n. To eat; to feed.

MESAGE. n. f. [mesage, French.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.

The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight, Through which her words to us do make their way, To bear the message of her get the spight. Spenser.

May one, that is a herald and a prince, Do a fair message to his lady's ears? Shakespeare. Arc.

She is fair, and fairer than that word, Of wondrous virtues, sometimes from her eyes I did receive fair messages. Shakespeare. Arc.

Gently hast thou told Thy message, which might else in telling wound, And in performing end us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let the minister be low, his interest intolerable, the world will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.

The welcome message made, was for a reward; 'Twas to be wish'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd. Dryden.

MESSENGER. n. f. [messager, Fr.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger; a forerunner.

Came running in, much like a man dismay'd, A messenger with letters, which his message said. Spenser.

Yon grey lines, That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakespeare. Arc.

The end dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believ'd he saw, and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Charendon.

Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entom'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.

MESSIAH. n. f. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.

Great and public opposition the magistrates made against Jesus, the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Hutts.

MESSIEURS. n. f. [French, plural of monseigneur.] Sirs; gentlemen.

MESMAIE. n. f. [mes and maie.] One who eats at the same table.

MESUAGE. n. f. [mesuagium, law Latin; formed perhaps from mesnage by mistake of the n in court hand for u, they being written alike, mesnage, from meson, Fr.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.

MET, the preterite and part. of meet.

A set of well meaning gentlemen in England, not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be wrong in any of their maxims or maxims of state. Shakespeare. Tw. of Ath.

METAGRAMMATISM. n. f. [meta and gramma.]

Anagrammism, or metagrammism, is a dislocation of a name into letters, as it elements, and a new connexion of a braided transposition, without a change, substituted, or change of any letter into different words, but in some perfect form attached to the person named. Candide.

METABOLIS. n. f. [Greek.] In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Dia.

METABOLA. n. f. [meta and bola.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.

METACARPO. n. f. [meta and carpo.] In anatomy, a bone of the arm made up of four bones, which are joined to the fingers. Dia.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis; as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wharton's Surgery.

METACARPAL. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the metacarpus. Dia.

It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Wharton's Surgery.

METALS. n. f. [metal, Fr. metallum, Lat.]

1. We understand by the term metal a firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when cold into a solid body, such as it was before, which is malleable under

the

the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver, to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi-metals. Hill.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fusing metals, that the melted metal run not out. Mason.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle.

Being glad to find their companions had so much mettle, after a long debate the mayor part carried it. Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of mettle he prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward,
Courage and steel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse. Hudibras.

METALEPSIS n. f. [μεταληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations. Bailey.

METALLICAL. } adj. [from metallum,
METALLICK. } Lat. metallique, Fr.
Partaking of metal; containing metal;
consisting of metal.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallurgical nature, or fusibility, seem to have solved it to nobler use, an art now utterly lost. Wotton's Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of metallurgical treasure, and metallurgical ore. Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [metallum and fero, Lat.] Producing metals. Dict.

METALLINE. adj. [from metallum.]

1. Impregnated with metal.

Metallic waters have virtual cold in them, put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden. Bacon.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interrupted bubbles, yet having caused the water to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves. Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metallum; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals, skilled in metals.

Metallic use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fusing metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood. Mixon's Mech. Exercises.

METALLOGRAPHY. n. f. [metallum and γραφειν.] An account or description of metals. Dict.

METALLURGIST. n. f. [metallum and εργον.] A worker in metals.

METALLURGY. n. f. [metallum and εργον.] The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore

To METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [metamorphoseo, French; μεταμορφωω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphosed me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time. Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphosed like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast. Darwin on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers, with no train, was enough to make any man unbeliever his five senses. Wotton.

From such rude principles our form began,
And earth was metamorphosed into man. Dryden.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [metamorphose, Fr. μεταμορφωσις.]

1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis. Sidney.
Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak. Government of the Tongue.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed? Dryden.

There are probable machines in epic poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men, but the less credible sort, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare. Broomer.

2. It is applied by Harvey to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like. Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. f. [metaphore, French; μεταφορα.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the sound; the Spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the Spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the Winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epopee delights. Dryden.

One died in metaphor, and one in song. Pope.

METAPHORICAL. } adj. [metaphorique,
METAPHORICK. } French; from metaphor.] Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The word which were do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use. Hooker.

METAPHRASE. n. f. [μεταφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase. Dryden.

METAPHRAST. n. f. [metaphraste, Fr. μεταφραστης.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICK. }

1. Verbed in metaphysics; relating to metaphysics.

2. In Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

Hie thee hither,
To chafe with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal. Shakespeare's Macb.

METAPHYSICK. } n. f. [metaphysique, Fr.

METAPHYSICKS. } [μεταφυσικη.] Ontology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematicks and the metaphysicks,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you. Shakespeare.

Call her the metaphysicks of her sex,
And say the tortures with as quaint a vein Physicians. Clarendon.

[If sight be caused by intromission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which, how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysicks. Petibam.

See physick beg the Stagyrte's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense! Pope's Dunci.

The topics of ontology or metaphysicks, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign. Watts's Logic.

METAPLASM. n. f. [μεταπλασμα.] A figure in rhetoric, wherein words or letters are transposed contrary to their natural order. Dict.

METASTASIS. n. f. [μεταστασις.] Translation or removal.

His disease was a dangerous asthma; the cause a metastasis, or translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs.

Harvey on Consumptions.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious; in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered. Sharp's Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μετα and tarsos.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot. Dict.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus. Wijman.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μεταθεσις.] A transposition

To METE. v. a. [metior, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psalms.

To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it. Holder.

Though you many ways pursue

To find their length, you'll never mete the true,

But thus; take all that space the sun

Mete out, when every daily round is run. Cock.

METEWAND. } n. f. [mete and yand, or METTYARD. } wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure meteward lieth before their eyes. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteward, weight, or measure. Lev. xix. 35.

To METEMPSYCHOSE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurpers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychosid, or translated into the bodies of asses, and there remain certain years, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones. Petibam on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μεταμψυχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts most suitable unto their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

METEOR. n. f. [meteore, Fr. μετεωρα.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?

What observation mad'st thou in this case,

Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face? Shakespeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor shone in fluence before. Bacon's Henry VII.

These

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whose matter in thee soon is spent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament. Donne.
Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene. Dryden.
Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies and blazing as I travell'd, Till all my fires were spent, and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar? Dryden's All for Love.
O poet, thou hadst been disreterer,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.
METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Others are considerable in meteorological divinity. Brown.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be new-comer guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteors of impression, not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Horace's Epist. Forst.

METEOROLOGIST. n. s. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologists observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency.

Hevel's Vuln. Enst.
METEOROLOGY. n. s. [μετεωρα and λογος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather. Brown.

METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their fixt stations, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous, as evening mist Rise from a river. Miln's Paradise Lost.

METER. n. s. [from metr.] A measure:
as, a coal meter, a land meter.

METHYGLIN. n. s. [meddyglyn, Welsh, from medd and glyn, to glue, Minsheu;
or meddyg, a physician, and llyn,
drink, because it is a medicinal drink.]
Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White handed mistress, one sweet word with thee,
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—May then two treys, and if you grow so nice,
Methylin, wort, and malmsey. Shakespeare.
T' ally the strength and hardness of the wine,
And withold Baccus new methylin join. Dryden.

METHINKS. verb impersonal. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I.] I think; it seems to me: me seems. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Metbinks was used even by those who used likewise me- seems.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, metbinks, not without great cause, for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous. Spenser on Ireland.

If he choote out some expression which does not vitate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts,
metbinks, he breaks it. Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, metbinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her. Addison's Spectator.

Metbinks already I your tears survey. Pope.
METHOD. n. s. [methode, Fr. μεθόδος.]
Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient to attain some end. Watts.

To see wherein the harm which they feel con-sisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill, the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties. Hecur.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will heat this method in your conscience. Shak.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain.

Addison's Spectator.
METHODICAL. adj. [methodique, French;
from method.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author.

Let me appeal, great Sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say. Addison's Reframond.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHODICALLY. adv. [from methodical.]
According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel, for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryd.

To METHODIZE. v. a. [from method.]
To regulate; to dispose in order.

Retolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd again unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize his revenge. Dryden's Boccaccio.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words, the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Sp. Sato.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addison's Spectator.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodiz'd. Pope.

METHODIST. n. s. [from method.]
1. A physician who practises by theory.

Our wisest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and dispensers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of metbinks
See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methought, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from me seems.

Metbought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakespeare.

Since I sought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly all my heart.
Metbought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy seed shall bruise our foe." Milton.

In these
I found not what, metbought, I wanted still. Miln.
Metbought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs observe, but knew not how.

Dryden.
METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.]
Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metony- mical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle.

METONYMY. n. s. [metonymia, French;
μετωνυμία] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which, by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPESCOPY. n. s. [metopescopie, Fr.
μετωπιασκη and σκοπεω.] The study of phy-siognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. s. [metrum, Latin; μετρον.]
Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables;
verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose.

Addison's Spectator.
About the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at louds. Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Lat. metricus,
French.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
2. Consisting of verses: as, metrical precepts.

METROPOLIS. n. s. [metropolis, Lat.
metropole, French; μητροπολις and πολις.]
The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unawue
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
But seen or some renown'd metropolis,
With glitt'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

Reduce'd in careful watch Round their metropolis Milton's Paradise Lost.
We stopped at Pavia, there was once the metropo- lis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town.

Addison on Italy.
METROPOLITAN. n. s. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church;
an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced many of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

METROPOLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Their pariah, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Russell.

courage in several actions, that his death was never suspected.

Camden.
This more to guide than spur the mule's pace,
Pelham history, thus provoke his speed,
The winged courier, like a generous hawk,
Shows most true mickle why you check his course.

Pope.
2. Substance: this at least should be mickle.

Obtuse! whose left hand is mickle,
Whence thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue.

Shakespeare.
METTLED, adj. [from mettle.] Sprightly; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mickle dance Says you never.

Ben Jonson.
Nor would you find it easy to compare
The mickle fleet, with from their nostrils flows }
The torching fire that in their nostrils glow. }

Shakespeare.
METTLISOME, adj. [from mettle.] Sprin-gly; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery;

same.] With spiritiveness.

Mew, n. f. [mue, French.]

1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth coming from her darksome mew,
Where she all day did hide her hated mew. Spenser.
There then she doctian form to monstrous hue,
And horribly misshapen with ugly sight,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mew,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shows.

Spenser.
Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty neck, or nice throat;
She hated chambers, closets, secret mews;
And in broad field prefer'd her maidenhood.

Parsons.
2. [May, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first that we reckon coots, sanderlings, and mews. Cicero.
The vessel thick, and shows her open'd hue,
And on her snout'd milt the mews in triumph ride. Dryden.

To Mew, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine, to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners mew'd,
Myster'd of mists as their books them the v. l.

Why should you mew, which, as they say, attend

The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kindness. Shakespeare's King John.

Fair Henry, question your dears,
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether it you yield not to your father's cheer,
You can endure the airy of a nun,
For eye to be study cluster mew'd,
To live a barren life in a life,
Clanking rain to the cold, fruitful moon.

Shakespeare.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kite and buzzard prey it liberty.

Shakespeare.
Feign them sick,
Lose mew'd in their bed, for fear of air.

Dryden's Jew.
It is not possible to keep a young person in from see by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all the mew him up in a closet, and never let him into company.

Locke.
2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their avies, mewings, casting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,

And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Cleaveland.

Nine times the moon had mew'd her horns, at length

With travel weary, unsuppl'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeen fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.

3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day.

Shakespeare.
They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

chaelmas for thirty pounds price. Cicero.

To MICHE, v. n. To be secret or covered; to be hid.

Many this is micheing malicho; it means mis-chance. Shakespeare.

MICHER, n. f. [from miche.] A lazy lounger, who skulks about in corners and by places, and keeps out of sight;
a hedge-creeper.

At that man the land is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western counties for a truant boy.

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the miche bind. Sidney.

Shall the blessed son of heav'n prove a miche, and eat black-berries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purser? a question to be asked. Shakespeare.

MICKLE, adj. [m.cel, Saxon.] Much;

great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This reade is rife that oftentime

Great cumburs fall unsoft:

In humble dales is footing fast,

The trode is not so tickle.

And though one fall through heedless haste,

Yet is his mife not mickle. Spenser's Pastoral.

In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities,

Shakespeare.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,

A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,

Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCOSM, n. f. [micro and cosmos.]

The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shakespeare.

She to whom this world must itself refer,

As suburbs, or the murels of her;

She, she is dead, she's dead, when thou

this,

Thou know it how lame a creeple this world is.

Donne.

As in this our microcosm, the heart

Heat, spirit, motions give to every part:

So Rome's victorious influence did disperse

All her own virtues through the universe. Derham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great, and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Swift.

MICROGRAPHY, n. f. [micro and grapho.]

The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernable

only with a microscope.

The honey bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satiate and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter:

a curious description and figure of the sting bee in

Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew's Museum.

MICROSCOPE, n. f. [micro and scopos;

microscope, French.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing to us, it would make all things appear rudd and deformed, the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us, the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

The critical eye, that microscope of wit,

Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad.

MICROMETER, n. f. [micro and metron;

micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCOPICAL, } adj. [from micro- microscopical. } scope.]

bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids.

Airbutnot and Pope.

2. Assisted by a microscope.

Evading even the microscopic eye!

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.

3. Resembling a microscope.

Why has not man a microscopic eye?

For this plain reason, Man is not a fly:

Say what the use, were finer optics given,

To inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dutch.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.

No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.

More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament radiant white. Milton.

MID-DAY. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional, being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be Sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is
He shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a Sidon y.

Is sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
Dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakespeare.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

MID-DAY. n. f. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly laboured, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Dryden.

MIDDEST. superl. of mid, midstest, midst.
Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Spenser.

MIDDLF. adj. [middle, Saxon.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.

The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people;
The middle virtues work in them astonishment,
But of the highest virtues they have no sense. Bacon's Essays.

A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.

To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines. Arthur's Foot in Cuba.

I like people of middle understanding and middle rank. Swift.

They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that who is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Hudibras.

2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning, the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Dryden.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.]

Placed about the middle of life.
A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown,
Took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Estrange.

The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood.

Asbuton on Aliments.

I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one; you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift.

MIDDLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.

Why have not some beasts more than four feet, suppose six, and the middlemost shorter than the rest? More.

The outmost fringe vanished first, and the middlemost next, and the innermost last. Newton's Opt.

The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended towards the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space. Bentley's Sermons.

MIDDLING. adj. [from middle.]

1. Of middle rank; of condition equally remote from high and low.

A middling sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough to long as any man had more. L'Estrange.

2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.

The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will easily extend. Grout.

Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence. Dryden.

MIDLAND. adj. [mid and land.]

1. That which is remote from the coast.

The same name is given to the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this island, by Caesar. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The midland towns abounding in wealth, shew that her riches are internal and domestic. Hovell.

The various dialects of the English in the North and West, render their expressions many times unintelligible to the other, and both scarce intelligible to the midland. Hale.

2. In the middle of the land; mediterranean.

There was the Plymouth Squadron now come in,
Which twice on Biscay's working bay had been,
And on the midland sea the French had aw'd. Dryden.

MIDGE. n. f. [midge, Saxon.] A gnat.

MID-HEAVEN. n. f. [mid and heaven.]

The middle of the sky.

But the hot hell that shew'd in him burns,
Though in mid heaven, soon ended his delight. Milton.

MIDLEG. n. f. [mid and leg.] Middle of the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white fatten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.

MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.] The middle.

Now vanish the foremost squadrons meet,
The midmost battles hasting up behind. Dryden.

Hear himself repine

At fate's unequal laws: and at the close,
Which, mercies in length, the midmost after drew. Dryden.

What dulness dropt among her sons imprecit,
Like motion, from one circle to the rest:
So from the midmost the rotation spreads
Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.

MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night.] Milton seems to have accented this last syllable.
The noon of night; the depth of night;
twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes. Shakespeare.

By night he fled, and at midnight returns
From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Miln.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.

Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of dew,
Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MILDEW. n. f. [milbeape, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease in plants, caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimonious corrodes, gnaws, and spoils the plant: or, mildew is either a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants, which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are condensed upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are inticed thereto.

Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words.

Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air, and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildew, blacken'd all the grain. Dryden.

MIND. n. f. [geminb, Saxon.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakespeare.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding; which word, mind, we use also for opinion, as, I am of this or that mind; and sometimes for men's conditions or virtues, as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind;

sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake; sometimes for the knowledge or principles, which we have without discourse; oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences; but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and possible, it is defined to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object, or more at large thus, a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be disordered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us masters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame late For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking; choice; inclination; propensity; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without asking counsel of God? Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind.
Shakespeare.

Being so hard to me that brought you mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakespeare.

I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakespeare.
He of the same mind one towards another.

Rom. xii. 16.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? For like has not.
Filios.

They had a mind to French Britain, but they have let fall their bit. Erson's War with Spain.
Sudden mind arose

In Adam, not to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Walker coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.

He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insufficient to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.

Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make?
Addison.

4. Thoughts; sentiments.

Th' ambiguous god,
In th' mysterious words, his mind express'd,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest.
Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose, as fearing you, it shook. Shakespeare.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space.
Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.

6. Memory; remembrance.

The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein be
His triple colour'd bow, whenon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Paradise Lost.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menelaus has not yet forgot to hug. Dryden.

He safe from loud alarms, Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden.

5. Persons employed in the publick affairs of a state.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance a court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MINIUM. [Latin.]

Melt lead in a brazen earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcinated into a grey powder, this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow, in this state it is used in painting, and is called minceot or minceit; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will become further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead; among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar; the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleaning and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. M.

MINNOCK. n. s. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.

An Ats-nole I fixed on his head; Anon he thusse must be answered, And forth my minnock comes. Shakespeare.

MINNOW. n. s. [menue, French.] A very small fish; a pink; a corruption of minim, which see.

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakespeare.

The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish; he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tangles; for being walked well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being filled with yolk of eggs, primroses, and tansy. Walton's Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow fishing. Walton's Angler.

MINOR. adj. [Latin.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn intricate fallacies. Brown.

2. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.

The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in notes and less noticeable numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MINOR. n. s.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. James on England.

He and his muse might be minors, but the libertines are full grown. Collier's View of the Stage.

Long as the year's dull circle seem to run, When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.

The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Saunders.

A minor cannot be said to be contentious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. A Luchner.

TO MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.]

To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a cube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object. Glaucowille.

MINORATION. n. s. [from minorate.]

The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without alatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose effluences are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITY. n. s. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakespeare.

He is young, and his minority Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakespeare.

These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since

M I R

Some torche bore, some links,
Before the proud virago mirax. Hudibras.
She, when but yet a tender mirax, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryd.
MIRACLE. n. f. [miracle, Fr. miracu-
lum, Lat.]

1. A wonder; something above human power.

Nothing almost sees miracles.
But misery. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shak sp.
Be not offended, nature's miracles,
Thou art allotted to be seen by me. Shakespeare.

2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.

The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of deism, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to this unprofitable amazement, but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and raising the dead. Bentley.

MIRACULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, French; from miracle] Done by miracle; produced by miracle, effected by power more than natural.

Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Raleigh's Essays.

Restore this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.

Why this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?
His might continues in thee not for naught. Milt.
At the first planting of the Christian religion,
God was pleased to accompany it with a miraculous power.

MIRACULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous] By miracle; by power above that of nature.

It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into that Christian par, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote together, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser's Faerie Queene.
Turbid was to be slain that very day, and Aeneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in the combat, until his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.

MIRACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from miraculous] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.

MIRADO. n. f. [Spanish, from mirar, to look] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see thews.

Men in time ye shall not find so bad before Gained fame, rich round, or by mirado, Beneath each lively stream of the under,
And bowing, took the mirado which they had.

MIRT. n. f. [mir, Dutch.] Mud, dirt at the bottom of water.

He has risen from her large flood
Would have cast a net, and trod in dirt. Sp.

Here's that, who too weak to be the honest water, which is not more than the
and the mir of the world.

I'm Ralph himself, you may say so
Who has dragg'd your doubting out of the mire.

I applied to my mother's person, whether it be not After that time should be a distinction, and and less, than that all should be one and the same.
Mary Magdalen's Letter.

M I R

Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn.

Roscommon.

TO MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To overwhelm in the mud; to soil with mud.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smeared thus, and mire'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakespeare.

MIRE. n. f. [myr, Welsh; myra, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.

MIRINESS. n. f. [from miry] Dirtiness; fullness of mire.

MIRKSOME. adj. [morck, dark, Danish.] In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.

Through mirksome air her ready way she make.

Fairly Queen.

MIRROR. n. f. [miroir, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]

1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold you faces as to crystal bright. Spenser.
That power which gave me eyes the world to view,

To view myself infused in inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect light. Dana.

Let bright the moon,

But opposite in level'd West was set

His mirror, with full face bowing her light

From him. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Shorn of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
I was d and displeased with her mirror fault, endure
A remedy like those whom mirror cures. Waller.

By chance he ty'd a mirror which he spoke,
And prying there beheld his altered look.

And things, he saw his features and his hue
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.

Dryden.

I ate a mirror of the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread portent imaged.

Pope.

2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as men look on a mirror to adjust their mien or dress, as a exemplar; an archetype.

The work of nature are no let effect, than if she did both behold and study how to express pure absolute shape of mirror always present before her.

Hooker.

O goddess, heaven's bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairly Queen.
How farst thou, mirror of all martial men?

Shakespeare.

Alone of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.

MIRROR-GLOSS. n. f. [glenset, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Dryden.

MIRTH. n. f. [myrrhe, Saxon.] Merriment; jollity; gaiety, laughter.

To give a mirrour to a mirrour, to let,
And keep the turn of uppling with a mirrour.

Shakespeare.

His eye forget occasion for his wit,
For every eye at that the eye doth catch,
The eye turns to a mirrour moving rest. Shak sp.

Most of the appearing mirrour in the world is not but the wounded spirit is not seen, but was under a mirrour. South.

With ground to warm the soul,
Bright mirrour of a mirrour inspiring bowl. Pope.

MIRTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full] Mirth; gay; cheerful.

No simple word,
That shall be uttered at our mirrour board, shall make us sad next morning. Ben Jonson.

M I S

The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirrour round.

Prior.

MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth] Joyless; cheerless.

MIRY. adj. [from mir.]

1. Deep in mud; muddy

Thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled.

Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.

Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay's Trivia.

So have I seen all coupled hounds
Dig different ways in miry grounds. Swift.

2. Consisting of mire.

Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shakespeare.

MIS, an inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples: but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.

MISACCEPTATION. n. f. [mis and acceptation] The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVENTURE. n. f. [misadventure, Fr. mis and adventure] Mischance, misfortune; ill luck, bad fortune.

Some misadventure. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much advances both his reputation and enterprise, if bravely he behave himself. Mary Ward.

The body consisted, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot.

Clarendon.

Distinguish betwixt misadventure and design.

L'Estrange.

The trouble of a misadventure now and then, that riches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution.

Locke on Education.

MISADVENTURED. adj. [from misadventure] Unfortunate.

From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,

A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;

Whole misadventur'd piteous overthrows

Do with their death bury their parents' strife.

Shakespeare.

MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised] Ill directed.

MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim] Not aimed rightly.

The idle misaimed enforcing furious way,

Mithing the mark of his misaimed flight,

Did fall to ground. Fairly Queen.

MISANTHROPE. } n. f. [misanthrope, Gr. } MISANTHROPOS. } [misanthropos, Gr. } A

hater of mankind.

I am a misanthrope, and hate mankind. Shakespeare.

Alas, poor dean! his only fault

Was to be held a misanthrope.

This into general odium drew him. Swift.

MISANTHROPY. n. f. [misanthropie, Fr. from from misanthropy.] Hatred of mankind.

MISAPPLICATION. n. f. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.

The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misapplication of their bounty.

Atterbury.

It is our duty to be provident for the future, and to guard against whatever may lead us into misapplications of it.

Rogers.

To MISAPPLY. v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.

Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied.

Shakspeare.

And vice sometime by action's dignified. The holy treasure was to be received, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends.

H. w.

He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea.

Locke.

To MISAPPREHEND. v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.

That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehensions or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments.

Locke.

MISAPPREHENSION. n. f. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.

It is a degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our misapprehensions and errors.

Glanville.

To MISASCRIBE. v. a. [mis and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.

That may be miscribed to art which is the bare production of nature.

Boyle.

Boyle.

To MISBECOME. v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unbecomely; not to suit.

Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible I was need not misbecome.

Sidney.

What to the dauphin from England?

—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt, And any thing that may not misbecome The mighty lord.

Shakspeare, Henry V.

That boldness which lays yet amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turned countenance, that those misbecoming and dissimulous ways of shuffling in the world must be disdained to make way for better principles.

Locke.

Fortius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct, Thy father will not act what misbecomes him.

Adams.

MISBEGOTT. } adj. [begot or begotten,
MISBEGOTTEN } with mis.] Unlaw- fully or irregularly begotten.

Contaminated, base,

And misbegotten blood, I spill on thine. Shakspeare.
Your words have taken such pain, as if they labour'd

To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling Upon the head of valour; which, indeed, is valour misbegotten, and come into the world When sects and factions were but newly born.

Shakspeare.

The misbegotten infant grows, And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes

The swelling rind, with unavailing strife, To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life.

Dryden.

To MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.

MISBEHAVED. adj. [mis and behave.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.

Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a *misbehave*d and sullen wench,
Thou poust it upon thy fortune and thy love.

Shakspeare.

MISBEHAVIOUR. n. f. [mis and behave.] Ill conduct; bad practice.

The misbehaviour of our particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others.

Addison's Freeholder.

MISBELIEVER. n. f. [mis and believer.] One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.

Yes, if I drew it with a civil intent
To take a misbeliever to my bed,
It must be so.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

To MISCALCULATE. v. a. [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.

After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated.

To MISCALL. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscall it so. Shakspeare.
The third act, which connects propositions and deductive conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it if we name it reason.

Glanville's Synopsis.

What you miscall their folly is their care. Dryden.

MISARRIAGE. n. f. [mis and carriage.]

1. Unhappy event of an undertaking; failure; ill conduct.

Resolutions of reforming do not always justify justice, nor prevent vengeance for former misarrangements.

King Charles.

When a counsellor, to save himself,
Would lay misarrangements upon his prince,
Exposing him to publick rage and hate,
O, 'tis an act as intamously base,
As should a common soldier skulk behind,
And thrust his general in the front of war. Dryden.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the misarrangements that follow on it must be imputed to his own election.

Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former cult had to spare, and wherewith they made for ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing, and the excess of fertility, which contributed so much to the misarrangements, was retracted and cut off. W. de Vries's Natural History.

Your cures aloud you tell,

But wily your misarrangements conceal. Glanville.

How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the sulkings and misarrangements of the numerous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon.

Rogers.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be misarrangements and abortions, for there are many women with child.

Glanville.

To MISCARRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to have the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the effect intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?

Shakspeare.

Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Shakspeare.

Is it concluded he shall be protector?

—It is determin'd, not concluded yet.

But so it must be if the king miscarry.

Shakspeare.

If you miscarry,

Your business of the world hath for an end,
And machination ceases. Shakspeare, King Lear.

Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my state is very low. Shakspeare.

I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miscarried.

Addison's Guardian.

No wonder that this expedient should be often miscarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it.

Sidney.

2. To have an abortion.

Give them a miscarrying womb and dry breast.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

So many political conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry, and prove abortive.

Southey's Sermon.

His wife miscarried, but the abortion proved a female fetus.

Pope and Arbuthnot.

You have proved yourself more tender of another's embryos, than the foster-mothers are of their own, for you have preserved every thing that I miscarried.

Pope.

MISCELLANE. n. f. [miscellaneous, Lat.]

This is corrupted into maslin or misslin. Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of use to make some miscellaneous in corn, as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better.

Boyle's Nat. Hist.

MISCELLANEOUS. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.] Mingled; composed of various kinds.

Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion, for such an amiable relation must ear in some, and without offence be unbelieved in many.

Brown.

And what the people but a herd confus'd,
A miscellaneous rabble, who extol Things vulgar, a d well weigh'd scarce worth the plate.

Milton's Par. Reg.

MISCELLANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from miscellaneous.] Composition of various kinds.

MISCELLANY. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.] Mixed of various kinds.

The power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellaneous forces of all nations.

Bacon.

MISCELLANY. n. f. A mass formed out of various kinds.

I regret myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend miscellanies or works of other men.

Pope.

When they have join'd their politicianies,
Out steps a book of miscellanies.

Swift.

To MISCAST. v. a. [mis and cast.] To take a wrong account of.

Men miscast their day, for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born.

Frederick's Vulgar Errors.

MISCHANCE. n. f. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Ceteropia sent him to excuse the mischance of her death, urging in that dangerous fort.

Sidney.

Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such misadventures as were little for the honour or benefit.

Sidney.

View this to rest, full of bad misadventures.

France is revolted.

Shakspeare, Henry VI.

Shake rock thy brain,

And never come misadventure between us twain.

Shakspeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him, and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent, otherwise it is a man's unhappiness, his misfortune or calamity, but not his fault.

Boyle.

62 MISCHIEF.

MISCHIEF. n. f. [meschef, old French.]
1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.

The law in that case punisheth the thought, for better is a misdeed than an inconvenience.

Spenser on Ireland.

Come you murthering ministers!

Wherever in your fightful substances

You wait on nature's mischance. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Thy tongue deviseth mischief.

Psal. lxx. 2.

Was I the cause of mischief, or the man

Whose lawless lust the civil war began? Dryden.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy, but the mischance was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MISCHIEF. v. a. [from the noun.]

MISCHIEF-MAKING. adj. Causing harm.

Come not thou with mischief making beauty,

To interpose between us, took not on in Rowe.

MISCHIEVOUS. adj. [from mischief.]

1. Harmful; hurtful; destructive; noxious; pernicious; injurious; wicked; used both of persons and things.

This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably *mischief*ous to society. South's Sermons.

I'm but a half-brother and villain yet,

But mongrel *mischief*ous. Dryden.

He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their matter was run mad, that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a pauper boy, that if he did not look after their matter he would do some very *mischief*ous thing. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

Spiteful; malicious. Arbutnot's Hist.

MISCHIEVOUSLY. adv. [from mischief.]

Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.

Nor was the cruel destiny content

To twine it on a belittled beauty too,

But had a fated doom to take a guide

To seek in *mischief*ous flow. Dryden.

And pounced full, and then destroyed. Dryden.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from mischief and ness.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.

Compare the harshness, the tenderness, the modesty, and the impetuosity of him, who in teeth, with the *mischief*ousness of the craft, the impudence, the subtlety, the confirmed obstinacy found in him, and the four. South's Sermons.

MISCHIEV. adj. [from mischief, Latin.]

Possible to be mischievous.

Acid spirits are subtle liquors, which come out in distillations, not in distillations, South's Sermons.

MISCHIEVING. n. f. [from mischief and ing.]

Afford me place to shew what recompence
Twards thee I intend for what I have misdone.

Milton.

To MISDO. v. n. To commit faults.

Try the cunning fool
Not wisely *misdo*ing, but unwisely Miled. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
I have *misdo*d, and I ender the merit,
Loth to acknowledge, but mine loth to part. Dryd.

MISDOER. n. f. [from misdo.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.

Were they not contained in duty with a tear of law, which inflicts sharp punishments to *misdo*ers, no man should cry, any thing *misdo*er on his head.

MISDOING. n. f. [from misdo.] Offence; deviation from duty.

The worst is, to think our lives safe so long as we keep our minds from the knowledge of men, out of our own view, without the awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our *misdo*ings.

Locke.

To MISDOUBT. v. a. [mis and doubt.]

To suspect of deceit or danger
Is the only *misdo*ubt me, I was in heaven; for quickly I was *misdo*ubt sufficient assurance. Sidney.
I do not *misdo*ubt my wife, but I would be loth to join them both together, a man may be too confident. Shakespeare.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wing *misdo*ubtful every bush;
And lo, the hunter's net comes to the bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was limed, was caught, and killed. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If you *misdo*ubt me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you farther. Shakespeare.

their time and faculties. Hart's Origin of Mankind.

MISER. n. f. [miser, Latin.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the tender.

Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous fore-token of misfortune to have met with such a miser
as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make,
Vouchsafe to slay your foe for humble miser's sake.

Spenser.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.

Deceitful miser, I wife ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood. Shakespeare.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though she be dearer to my soul than life
To many pilgrims, or to miser's gold,
Rather than wrong Castals I'd forget her. Orway.

No silver founts by diving miser's giving,
Here br'd the rage of ill requited heav'n,
But such plain roots as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, Fr. miser,
Lat.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous, wretched.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?

Shakespeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious What's more miserable than a content? Shakespeare.
There will be a future fire, and then how miser- able is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch.

Shakespeare.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden.

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrelled, one of which was slain, and the other hung for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably rabbed to death. Scotch.

2. Wretchedly; meanly

As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you, so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained.

Sidney.

3. Covetously.

Ainsworth.

MISERY. n. f. [miseria, Latin; miser,
French.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with *miser*y. Shakespeare.
Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and *miser*y the utmost pain.

Locke.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those temper-which we learnt in *miser*y. Locke.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of mifery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our *miser*ies out. Sidney.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal fruit,
And mourn the *miser*ies of humankind. Dryden.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice.
Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy, but a covetous man; yet *miser*y now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck of the world. he covets less.
Then *miser*y itself would give. Shakespeare's Coriol.

In a tabick of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model, for a little *miser*y may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Atterbury.

Sidney.

What's his delight, or joy, or *mis*fortune's
Can heart to plunge in sea of *mis*fortune,
And heap'd with so huge *mis*fortune's reach?

Shakespeare.

Consider why the change was wrought,
You find it his *mis*fortune, not his fault. Shakespeare.

To MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late pursuing proph-Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond.

So doth my heart *mis*give me in their conduct.
What may betide him, to his harm or ours.

Shakespeare.

This is strange! Who hath got the right hand?
My heart *mis*gives me. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Yet oft his heart divine of tomorrow all
*mis*gives me. Milton.

His heart *mis*gives me, that these were to man, meeting-houses, but, upon communicating his poems, I soon made him easy. Addison's Spectator.

MISGIVING. n. f. [from misgive.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his situation, the sure result in the plunge of infinite distress, futurity, and mis- givings, both as to the means of his present duty, and the mind issues of his future reward.

Smith.

To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.]

To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Solyman charged him bitterly, that he had mis- govern'd the state, and inverted his treasure to his own use. Locke.

MISGOVERNED. adj. [from misgovern.]

Rude; uncivilized.

Rude.

Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mistrive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser.
To MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.

The debates of princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism. Locke.

MISMANAGEMENT. n. s. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.

It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that direct. Locke.

The falls of favourites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new,
All neither wholly false, nor wholly true. Pope.

She became a profess enemy to the arts and sciences, and scarce ever wrote a letter to him without wilfully *mis*spelling his name. Spectator.

To MISPEND. v. a. preterite and part. passive *mis*pent. [mis and spend.]

1. 'To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.

What a deal of cold business doth a man *mis*pend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. Ben Jonson's Discovery.

Let him now endeavour to redeem what he hath *mis*pent by employing more of that leisure in this duty for the future. Duty of Man.

First guilty conscience does the mirror bring,
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting,
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long *mis*pent, luxurious life. Dryden.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply *mis*pent and vain. Blunckie.

He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem, but he who has *mis*pent much has still a greater concern. Rogers.

With men retrieve, as far as they are able, every *mis*pent or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.

2. 'To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.

Now let the ached knife their thirsty limbs

by supreme authority.

After tracing the missio wild,
All his great work to come before him set,
How to begin, how to accomplish best,
His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milton.

The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high priest of our motation, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.

2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.

In this ship, there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge

ledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.

In Cæsar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him to their other desires, whereupon with one cry they asked mission. Bacon.

4. Faction; party. Not in use.

Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

MIST. n. f. [mijt, Saxon.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from fu;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our duk nation long involv'd. Derham.
And nests condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. R. Jonsson.

A mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend, so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Cruve.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with fable shades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My peoples eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are misled into the most desperate actions. King Charles.

His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.
VOL. II.

TO MIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking glass,
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she live. Shakespeare's King Lear.

MISTAKEABLE. adj. [from mistake.]
Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the distance of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set to the in minor and less mistake all numbers. Bacon.

TO MISTAKE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

MISTINESS. n. f. [from misly.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy separation of air upon watry moisture, and velocity of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all deam to subside the moisture, for the misiness scattereth immediately. Bacon.

MISTION. n. f. [from mistus, Latin.]
The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mision, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon dissolution. Brown.

Both bodies dry, by the new texture resulting from their mision, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.

MISTLETOE. n. f. [myrtelan, Saxon; mistel, Danish, bird lime, and tan, a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a baton, divided into four parts, and bect with wnt; the ovary which is produced in the female flower is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flower, and consists of four shorter leavs, this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plum heart-shaped seed. This plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees, it is whence the ancient accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrecence on the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe then, which is set upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is dry, doth open the seed from tree to tree, for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth and trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Milkr.

It snows do continue, sheeps hardly that fare.
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare. Tiff.
A barren and destitute vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful mistle. Shakspeare.
Mistle groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazel, and rarely upon oaks: the mistle whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glistening berry, and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.

All your temples strow
With laurel green, and laced mistle. Gay.
MISTLE. adj. [mistle and like.] Resembling a mist.

4. Chastity; purity of manners.

Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shews? But she is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.
Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.
Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clarissa.

MODESTY-PILCE. n. s.

A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-pilce. Addison.

MODICUM. n. s. [Latin.] Small portion; pittance.

What modicum of wit he utters; his evasions have eas'd thus long. Shakespeare.

Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,

Yet still they grudge that modicum. Dryden.

MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] Divisible by various modes.

MODIFICATION. n. s. [modification, Fr.]

The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth. Holder.

The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impinged, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton.

If these powers of cognition, volition and sensation, are either inherent in matter as such, nor ascribable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporated inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Bentley.

TO MODIFY. v. a. [modifier, French.]

1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be compounded in syllables and words through the various motion of the organs, that they modify and interminate the voice without appearing to interminate. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fall upon the paper, did, without any concourse of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with a uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton.

2. To soften; to moderate.

Of his grace

He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

TO MODIFY. v. a. To extenuate.

After all this diftancing and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.

MODILLON. n. s. [French; modiolus, Latin.]

Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the lapides or drip; this part must be distinguished from the great modiol, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.

The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Spectator.

MODISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city, the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison's Spectator.

MODISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly.
Locke.

MODISHNESS. n. s. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

TO MODULATE. v. a. [modular, Latin.]

To form sound to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, wreath, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate
the sound. Crook's Cymel.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive to many? Drom.

Echo propagates around

Each charm of modular sound. Anon.

MODULATION. n. s. [from modulate; modulation, French.]

1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixed: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Hood's and d.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognition with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers and human souls clothed in flesh.

Government of the Tongue.

2. Sound modulated; harmony; melody.

Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, melodious. Thomson's Spr.

MODULATOR. n. s. [from modulate.] He who forms sounds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.

The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Derham.

MODULE. n. s. [modulus, Latin.] An empty representation; a model; an external form.

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou see'st, is but a cloud
And modole of confounded royalty. Shakspeare.

MODUS. n. f. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for tithes on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.

One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the tithe of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swift.

MODWALL. n. f. [picus.] A bird. Ainsworth.
MOE. adj. [ma, Saxon. See Mo.] More;
a greater number.

The chronicles of England mention no mo than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker.

MOHAIR. n. f. [mohere, moire, French] Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.

She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the signs on an Indian chest,
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Obtrudes how much a chintz exceeds mohair. Pope.

MOHOCK. n. f. The name of a cruel nation of America given to ruffians who infested, or rather were imagined to infest, the streets of London.

From milk-sop he starts up mohock. Prior.
Who has not trembled at the mohock's name?

Thou hast fallen upon me with the rage of a mad dog, or a mohock. Dennie.

MOIDERED. adj. [properly moddered, or muddled] Crazed. Ainsworth.

MOIDOR. n. f. A Portugal coin, rated at one pound seven shillings.

MOIETY. n. f. [moies, Fr. from moien, the middle.] Half; one of two equal parts.

This contrary being divided into two equal moieties, the one before, the other after the coming of Christ; that part which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall embrace, the Christian religion, we term, as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker.

The death of Antony
Is not a single doom, in that name lay
A moety of the world. Shakspeare, Antony and Cleop.
Touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a moety of the principal. Shakspeare.

The militia was settled, a moety of which should be nominated by the king, and the other moety by the parliament. Cromwell.

As this is likely to produce a cessation of arms among one half of our island, it is reasonable that the more beautiful moety of his majesty's subjects should establish a truce. Addison.

TO MOIL. v. a. [moiller, French.]

1. To daub with dirt.
All they which were left were moil'd with dirt and mure by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Knolls.

2. To weary.
No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves, receive Prize equal. Clayton's Illud.

TO MOIL. v. n. [moiller, French.]

1. To labour in the mire.
Moil not too much under ground, for the hope of mines is very uncertain. Bacon's Essays.

2. To toil; to drudge.
The name of the laborious William Noy, attorney-general to Charles the First, was anagram-matized, I moil in Law. Horace.
They toil and moil for the interest of their masters, that in requital break their hearts. D'Estrange.
Oh the endless misery of the life I lead! cries the moiling husband; to spend all my days in ploughing.

Now he must moil, and drudge for one he loathes.
L'Estrange.
Dryden.

With thee 'twas Marlan's dear delight
To moil all day, and merry-make at night. Gay.

MOIST. adj. [moiste, moite, French.]
1. Wet, not dry; wet, not liquid; wet in a small degree.

The hills to their supply
Vapour, and exhalation dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton.

Why were the moist in number so outdone,
That to a thousand dry they are but one?

Many who live well in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon a relaxation in a moist
one. Blackmore.
Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleasing toils deny. Arbutnot.

2. Juicy; succulent. Pope.
Ainsworth.

TO MOIST. v. a. [from moist.] To
To MOISTEN. } make damp; to make wet to a small degree; to damp.
Write till your ink be dry; and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line.

His breasts are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow. Shakspeare.
A pipe a little moistened on the inside, so as there be no drops left, maketh a more solemn sound than if the pipe were dry. Job, xxi. 24.
When torrents from the mountains fall no more,
The swelling river is reduced into his shallow bed,
With scarce water to moisten his own pebbles. Bacon.

3. To moisten. Shakspeare.
His breasts are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow. Job, xxi. 24.

When torrents from the mountains fall no more,
The swelling river is reduced into his shallow bed,
With scarce water to moisten his own pebbles. Bacon.

MOISTENER. n. f. [from moisten.] The person or thing that moistens.

MOISTNESS. n. f. [from moist.] Dampness; wetness in a small degree.

Pleasure both kinds take in the moistness and density of the air. Bacon's Natural History.
The small particles of brick or stone the least moistness would join together. Addison's Guardian.

MOISTURE. n. f. [moiteur, French; from moist.]

1. State of being moist; moderate wetness.

Sometimes angling to a little river near hand, which, for the moisture it bestowed upon roots of some flourishing trees, was rewarded with their shadow. Sidney.

Set such plants as require much moisture upon sandy, dry grounds. Bacon's Natural History.
While dryness moisture, and drenches heat refills,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Dryden.

2. Small quantity of liquid.
All my body's moisture

Scarcely serves to quench my turnace-burning heat.

If some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash the untasted moisture from him?

MOKE of a net. The meshes. Ainsworth.

MOKEY. adj. Dark; as, moky weather.
Ainsworth. It seems a corruption of murky. In some places they call it vascular blood, which grows into a kind of flesh in the uterus, and is called a false conception. Quincy.

2. A natural spot or discolouration of the body.

To nourish hair upon the mole of the face, is the perpetuation of a very ancient custom.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such in painting are the warts and *mole*s, which, adding a likeness to the face, are not therefore to be omitted. Dryden.

That Timothy, Trim, and Jack were the same person, was proved, particularly by a mole under the left pap. Arbutnot.

The peculiarities in Homer are marks and *mole*s,
by which every common eye distinguishes him. Pope.

3. [From mole, Latin; mole, French.]
A mound; a dyke.

Sion is streighten'd on the north side by the sea-ruined wall of the mole. Sandys.

With asphaltick slime the gather'd beach
They fatten'd; and the mole immense wrought on Over the foaming deep high-arch'd; a bridge
Of length prodigious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The great quantities of stones dug out of the rock could not easily conceal themselves, had they not been consumed in the *mole*s and buildings of Naples. Addison on Italy.

But the broad arch the dangerous flood contain,
The mole projected break the rising main. Pope.

4. [Talpa.] A little beast that works under-ground.

Tread softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall; we howl are near his cell. Shakspeare.

What is more obvious than a mole, and yet what more palpable argument of Providence? Mare.
Moles have perfect eyes, and holes for them through the skin, not much bigger than a pin's head. Ray on Creation.
Thy arts of building from the bee receive;
Learn of the mole to plow, the worm to weave.

MOLEBAT. n. f. [arthragoriscus] A fish.

MOLECAST. n. f. [mole and cast] Hillock thrown up by the mole working under ground. It is used proverbially, in hyperboles, or comparisons from something small.

You need your solitariness with the conceits of the poets, whose liberal pens can as easily travel over in mountains as molehills. Stacy.

The rocks, on which the salt-sea billows beat,
And Atlas' tops, the clouds in height that pair,
Compa'd to his huge person molehills be. Freux.

A churchwarden, to express Saint Martin's in the field, caused to be engraved a martin sitting upon a molehill between two trees. Pembam.

Our politician having baffled conscience, must not be completed with rational obligations; and, having leapt over such mountains, he down before a molehill. South's Sermons.

Mountains, which to your Maker's view Seem less than molehills do to you. Pope's Essay.

Strange ignorance! that the same man who knows
How far yond mount above this molehill shows,
Should not perceive a difference great Between small incomes and a vast estate! Dryden.

TO MOLEST. v. a. [molester, Fr. molester,
Lat.] To disturb; to trouble; to vex.

If they will firmly persist concerning points which hitherto have been disputed of, they must agree that they have molested the church with needless opposition. Hooker.
No man shall meddle with them, or molest them in any matter. 1 Macc. x. 35.

Pleasure and pain signify whatsoever delights or molests us. Locke.

Both are doom'd to death;
And the dead wake not to molest the living. Rowe.

MOLESTATION. n. f. [molestia, Latin; from molest.] Disturbance; uneasiness caused by vexation.

Though useless unto us, and rather of molestation, we refrain from killing swallows. Brown.

An internal satisfaction and acquiescence, or disquietude and molestation of spirit, attend the practice of virtue and vice respectively. Norris's Miscel.

MOLESTER. n. f. [from molest.] One who disturbs.

MO'LLIFIABLE. adj. [from mollify.] That may be softened.

MOLLIFICATION. n. f. [from mollify.] 1. The act of mollifying or softening.

For induration or mollification, it is to be inquired what will make metals harder and harder, and what will make them softer and softer. Bacon.

2. Pacification; mitigation.

Some mollification, sweet lady. Shakespeare.

MO'LLIFIER. n. f. [from mollify.] 1. That which softens; that which appeases.

The root hath a tender, dainty heart; which, when it cometh above ground to the sun and air, vanishes; for it is a great misfeet. Bacon.

2. He that pacifies or mitigates.

MO'LLIFY. v. a. [mollio, Latin; mollir, French.]

1. To soften, to make soft.

2. To assuage.

Neither herb, nor mollifying plaster, restored them to health. Wisd. xvi. 12.

Sores have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment. Isaiah. i. 6.

3. To appease, to pacify; to quiet.

Thinking her silent imaginations began to work upon somewhat, to mollify them, as the nature of musick is to do, I took up my harp. Sidney.

He brought them to this savage parts,
And with sweet music mollify'd their stubborn hearts. Spenser.

The dove, on the wedding night, finding the knight's aversion, speaks a good word for her self, in hope to mollify the fallen and groggy. Dryden.

4. To qualify; to lessen any thing harsh or burdensome.

They would, by yielding to some things, when they refused other, sooner prevail with the house, to mollify their demands, than at first to reclaim them. Clarendon.

Cowley thus paints Goliath.

The valley, now his monster seem'd to fill,
And we, methought, look'd up to him from out the hill;

where the two words, seem'd and methought, have mollified the figure. Dryden.

MOLTEN. part. pass. from melt.

Brass is molten out of the stone. Job. xxviii. 2.

In a small furnace made of a temperate heat, the heat be such as may keep the metal molten, no more. Bacon.

None, or molten gold, express. Prior.

MO'LY. n. f. [moly, Latin; moly, French.]

A plant.

Moly, or wild garlic, is of several sorts; as the great moly of Homer, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, serpent's moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, Dioscorides's moly, the sweet moly of Montpellier: the roots are tender, and must be carefully defended from frosts: as for the time of their flowering, the moly of Homer flowers in May, and continues till July, and so do all the rest except the last, which is late in September: they are hardy, and will thrive in any soil. Mortimer.

The sovereign plant he drew,
And shew'd its nature, and its wondrous pow'r,
Black was the root, but milky white the flower;
Molly the name. Pope's Odyssey.

MOLASSES. } n. f. [melazze, Italian.]

MOLASSES. } Treacle; the spume or scum of the juice of the sugar cane.

MOME. n. f. A dull, stupid blockhead, a stock, a post: this owes its original to the French word momon, which signifies the gaming at dice in masquerade, the rule of which is, that a strict silence is to be observed; whatsoever sum one stakes another covers, but not a word is to be spoken; hence also comes our word mum for silence. Hanmer.

Mome, malhorse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch! Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch. Shakespeare.

MOMENT. n. f. [moment, Fr. momentum, Lat.]

1. Consequence; importance; weight; value.

We do not find that our Saviour reproved them of error, for thinking the judgment of the scribes to be worth the objecting, for esteeming it to be of any moment or value in matters concerning God. Hacker.

I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moments. Shakespeare.

What towns of any moment but we have? Shak.

It is an abstruse speculation, but also of far less moment and consequence to us than the others; seeing that without this we can evince the existence of God. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Force, impulsive weight; actuating power.

The place of publick prayer is a circumstance in the outward form, which hath moment to help devotion. Hooker.

Can these or such be any aid to us?

Look they as they were built to shake the world?

Or be a moment to our enterprise? Ben Jonson.

'Touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free-will, to her own inclining let In even scale. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He is a capable judge; can hear both sides with an indifferent ear; is determined only by the merits of truth, and so retracts his past errors. Norris.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted. Shakespeare's Merry Wives.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,

Unless the deed go with it: from this moment

The very firstlings of my heart shall be

The firstlings of my hand. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The machinery reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.

While I a moment's name, a moment's past;

I'm nearer death in this verse than the last;

What then is to be done? Be wise with speed;

A fool at forty is a fool indeed. Young.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss

In this great moment, in this golden now,

When ev'ry trace of what, or when, or how,
Shou'd from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.

MOMENTALLY. adv. [from momentum, Lat.] For a moment.

Air but momentarily remaining in our bodies, hath no proportionable space for its conversion, only of length enough to refrigerate the heat. Broun.

MOMENTANEOUS. } adj. [momentaneus,

Mo'MENTANY. } French; momentaneus, Latin.] Lasting but a moment.

Small difficulties, when exceeding great good is sure to ensue; and, on the other side, momentary benefits, when the hurt which they draw after them is unspeakable, are not at all to be respected. Hooker.

Flame above is durable and consistent; but with us it is a stranger and momentary. Bacon.

Mo'MENTARY. adj. [from moment.] Lasting for a moment; done in a moment.

Momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream. Shakespeare.

Scarce could the shady king
The horrid sum of his intentions tell,
But she, swift as the momentary wing
Of lightning, or the words he spoke, left hell. Crafbow.

Swift as thought the sitting shade
Through air his momentary journey made. Dryden.

Onions, garlick, pepper, salt and vinegar, taken in great quantities, excite a momentary heat and fever. Abulbrat.

Mo'NARCH. n. f. [monarch, French; μοναρχία.]

1. A governor invested with absolute authority, a king.

I was
A morsel for a monarch. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself, Shakespeare's

The father of a family or nation, that uses his servants like children, and advises with them in what concerns the commonweal, and thereby is willingly obeyed by them, is what the schools mean by a monarch. Temple.

2. One superior to the rest of the same kind.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

With

With ease distinguish'd, is the regal race,
One monarch wears an open, honest face;
Shap'd to his size, and godlike to behold,
His royal body shines with specks of gold. Dryden.
Return'd with dice remorseless sway,
The monarch savage rends the trembling prey. Pope.
President.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eye,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Stak sp. av.
MONARCHAL. adj. [from monarch.] Suiting a monarch; regal; princely; imperial.

Satan, whom now transcendent glory rais'd
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride, Confused of highest worth, unmov'd thus spake. Milton.

MONARCHICAL. adj. [monarchique, Fr.
monarchique; from monarch.] Vested in a single ruler.

That storks will only live in free states, is a putty conceit to advance the opinion of popular policies, and from antipathies in nature to disparage a monarchial government. Brown.

The decretals resolve all into a monarchial power at Rome. Baker's Reflections on Liberty.
TO MONARCHISE. v. n. [from monarch.]
To play the king.

Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchise, be fear'd, and kill with looks. Shakespeare.

monarchie.]

1. The government of a single person.
While the monarchy flourish'd, there wanted not a protector. Atterbury's Sermon.

2. Kingdom; empire.
I pass
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cri'd aloud, What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence? Shakespeare.

This small inheritance
Contenteth me, and 's worth a monarchy. Shakespeare.
MONASTERY. n. f. [monastère, French;
monasterium, Latin.] House of religious retirement; convent; abbey; cloister. It is usually pronounced, and often written, monastery.

Then courts of king were held in high renown,
There, virgins honourable vow receiv'd,
But chaste as maids in monasteries liv'd. Dryden.
In a monastery your devotions cannot carry you so far toward the next world, as to make this life
the light of you. Pope.

MONASTICK. } adj. [monastique, French;
monastical.] MONASTICAL. } monasticus, Lat.] Religiously recluse; pertaining to a monk.
I drive my sutor to forsake the full stream of the world, and to live in a monk merely monastic.
Shakespeare. As you like it.

The filitious and laity vests of the strictest orders of nuns derive the institution of their monastic life from the example of John and Elias. Brown's English Literature.

When young, you led a life monastick,
And wore a vest ecclesiastick,
Now in your age you grow fantastick. Dutton.

MONASTICALLY. adv. [from monastick.]
Reclusely; in the manner of a monk.
I have a dozen years more to answer for, all monastically pass'd in this country of liberty and delight. Swift.

merce.

Importune him for monies: he not ceas't
With slight denial. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.
The jealous wittoly knave hath masses of money.
Shakespeare.

You need my help, and you say,
Shylock, we would have money. Shakespeare.
I will give thee the worth of it in money.
1 Kings, xxi. 2.

Wives the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy
And lend the monies on return of lust. Ben Jonson.
Money differs from uncoin'd silver, in that the quantity of silver in each piece of money is ascertain'd by the stamp it bears, which is a publick voucher. Locke.

My discourse to the hen pick'd has produced many correspondents, such a discourse is of general use, and every minded man's money. Addison.
Shall I withhold a little money or food from my fellow creature, for that he should not be good enough to receive it from me? Law.
People are not oblig'd to receive any money, except of their own coinage by a publick mint. Swift.

Those hucksters or money jobbers will be found necessity, if this bad money is made current in the exchange. Swift.

MONNEYBAG. n. f. [money and bag.] A large purse.

Look to my house; I am right loth to go;
There is some ill a brewing towards my self,
For I did dream of moneybags to-night. Shakespeare.

My place was taken up by an ill bred puppy,
with a moneybag under each a in. Addison's Guard.

The usurers or moneychangers being a scandalous employment at Rome, is a reason for the high rate of interest. Arbutnot.

MONNEYED. adj. [from money.] Rich in money: often used in opposition to those who are possessed of lands.

Invite a money'd man to lend to the merchants,
for the continuing and quickening of trade. Bacon.

If exportation will not balance importation, away must your silver go again, whether it be paid or not money'd, for where goods do not, silver must pay for the commodities you spend. Locke.

Several turned their money into those funds,
merchants as well as other busy'd men. Swift.

With that measure fell in all money'd men;
such as had a rule of sums by trading with stocks and funds, and lend'g upon great interest. Swift.

ter.] Account of debtor and creditor.

What if you and I, Nick, should enquire how money-matters stand between us? Arbutnot.

MONNEYSKRIVENER. n. f. [money and scrivener.] One who raises money for others.

Suppose a young unexperienced man in the hands of money-skriveners; such fellows are like your wire drawing mills, if they get hold of a man's finger, they will pull in his whole body at last. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

MONNEYWORT. n. f. A plant.

MONNEYSWORTH. n. f. [money and worth.] Something valuable; something that will bring money.

There is either money or moneyworth in all the controversies of life, for we live in a mercenary world, and it is the price of all things in it. L'Estrange.

MONNGORN. n. f. [mang, Saxon, and corn.] Mixed corn: as, wheat and rye;
miscellaneous, or massin.

MONNGER. n. f. [mangene, Saxon, a trader; from mangian, Saxon, to trade.]
A dealer; a seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity to express a seller of that commodity: as, a fishmonger; and sometimes a medler in any thing: as, a whoremonger; a newsmonger.

Do you know me?—Yes, excellent well, you are a fish-monger. Shakespeare.

The impatient states-monger
Could now contain himself no longer. Hudibras.

MONNGREL. adj. [as mangcorn, from mang, Saxon, or mengu, to mix, Dutch.] Of a mixed breed: commonly written mungrel for mangrel.

This rabot
Is of a mongrel, divers kind,
Clunk before, and luv behind. Hudibras.

Ye monger I work of heav'n, with human shapes,
That have not just enough of sense to know
The master's voice. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

I'm but a half strain'd villain yet,
But monger mischiefous. Dryden.

Fide, growling, worthless vetches;
Mongrels in faction, poor faint hearted traitors. Atkins.

His friendships till to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind,
No tools of rank, or mongrel breed,
Who fain would pass for lords and peers. Swift's Misc.

MONNIMENT. n. f. [from monna, Lat.] It seems here to signify inscription.

Some other we're given and dissent
Into great nights and to wedges square,
Some in to mid plates withouten money. Every Queen.

TO MONNISH. v. a. [mones, Latin.] To admonisher; a monitor.

MONITION. n. f. [monitio, Lat. monition,
French.]

1. Information; hint.

We have no visible monition of the returns of any other period, such as we have of the day, by successive light and darkness. Haller on Time.

2. Instruction; document.

Unruly ambition is deaf, not only to the advice of friends, but to the counsels and monitions of reason itself. L'Estrange.

Then after sage monition from his friends,
His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politics his dangerous wit. Swift.

MONNITOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty;
one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: be but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monition.

monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own audit.

Saunders's Sermon.

We can but divine who it is that speaks, whether Perillus himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person.

Dryden.

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mischiefs.

Locke.

MONITORY. adj. [monitrice, French; monitorius, Latin.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Losses, misadventures, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive.

MONK. n. f. [monec, Saxon; monachus, Latin; μοναχός.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

'T would prove the verity of certain words, Spoke by a holy monk. Shakspeare's Henry VIII. Abbotwick, a monk weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk.

Kneller.

The monkish monks, the scorn and shame of mankind.

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession, And nestle in their ancient hives again.

Rever.

Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ, for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are.

Aylmer's Paragon.

MONKEY. n. f. [monkin, a little man.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey.—Iubal, it was my turquois, I would not have given it for a wilder monkey.

Shakspeare.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey.

Shakspeare.

Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness.

Locke on Educ.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine.

But apes and monkeys are the gods within.

Grannville.

Non timer.

MOOSE. n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.

To MOOT. v. a. [from motian, mot, xemot, meeting together, Saxon; or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mot, French.] To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

MOOT case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.

In this moot case your judgment to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden's Juvenal.

Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws?

Locke on Education.

Let us drop both our pretences, for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Stutti.

Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

MO'ORED. adj. Plucked up by the root.

Ainsworth.

MO'OTIER. n. f. [from moot] A disputer of moot points.

MOP. n. f. [moppa, Welsh; mapp, Lat.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.

Such is that sprinkling which some careles quean
Flits on you from her mop, but not so clean.

You fly, invoke the gods, then turning, stop
To rail; the ringing still whirrs on her mop. Swift.

2. [Perhaps corrupted from mock.] A wry mouth made in contempt.

Each one tripping on his toe
Will be here with mop and mow. Shakespeare.

To MOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To MOP. v. n. [from mock.] To make wry mouths in contempt.

Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obdicut, Hobbiden, pounce of dumb nicks; Mahu, of stealing, Mohu, of murder, and Hobbertigibbet, of mopping and mowings, who since possess his chamber-maids. Shakespeare.

An ale sell a mopping and blaying at a horn.

L'Estrange.

To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant day-dream; to be spiritless, unactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers.

Shakespeare.

Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling fans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense

Could not so mope. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I'm in a dream were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the wasting of the midnight taper.

Roxce.

To MOPE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.

They say there are charms in herbs, said he,
and so throw a handful of galls; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.

Severity breaks the mind, and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke.

MOPE-LEYS. adj. Blind of one eye.

Ainsworth.

MO'PPEY. n. f. [perhaps from mop.] A puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in t'other?
A very pretty moppet! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

MO'PUS. n. f. [A cant word from mope] A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
But a rabble of tenants. Swift's Miscell.

MO'RAL. adj. [moral, French; moralis, Latin.]

1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal, good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. He l.
Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral.

Hobbes.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life, but in supernatural it alone guideth.

Hooke.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain.

Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy slay'r begins his threat,
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and crest.

Shakespeare.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be stated infallible; and moral certainty may properly be stated indubitable. Watts.

We have found, with a moral certainty, the seat of the intellectual axis. Buget's Theory of the Earth.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony.

Tillotson.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject.

Watts.

MO'RAL. n. f.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and economy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

M O R

Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.

—Moral! No, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy chitelle. Shakespeare.
Expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakespeare's Tem. of the Shrew.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction, this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufresne.

I found a moral first, and then I studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift.

To MO'RAL. v. n. [from the adjective.]

To moralize; to make moral reflections. Not in use.

When I did hear

The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chant clerk,
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shak.

MORA'LIST. n. f. [moraliste, Fr.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his poems, and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Alphon.

MORA'LITY. n. f. [moralité, French; from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethicks.

The system of morality, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Mycelary.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in morality, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The morality of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

To MO'RALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He has left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.

—I pray thee moralize them. Shakespeare.

Did he not moralize this spectacle?

—O yes, into thousand families. Shakespeare.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb.

L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce waives and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Fairy Queen.

3. In Pier, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
And with his prince's arms he moralized his song.

Prior.

To MO'RALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MO'RALIZER. n. f. [from moralize.] He who moralizes.

MO'RALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally is called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally.

Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L. Efrange.

I am from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than such a one as is biassed by affections and interests. Wilkins.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false.

Atterbury's Sermons.

MORALS. n. f. [without a singular.]

The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been tedious to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. Scot's Sermons.

Learn then what morals critics ought to shew: 'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join, In all you speak, let truth and candour shine. P. p.

MORALS. n. f. [morals, French.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landscapes point out the surest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and moorlands of the country. Hutchins's Antiquities.

The more with fury burns the blazing fire. Dryden.

As the blood passeth through narrower channels, the redness disappears more and more. Arbuthnot.

The more God has blest any man with estate or quality, just so much less in proportion is the care he takes in the education of his children. Scot's Misdeeds.

2. The particle that forms the comparative of more.

I am more than with my more headier will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the sound man. Shakespeare's King Lear.

May you long live a happy infant to your king and country: happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

The advantage of learning are more lasting than those of arms. Cicero on Prudence.

3. Again; a second time. Little did I think I should ever have business of the kind on my hands more. Lucas.

4. Longer; yet continuing: with the negative particle. Calbus is no more! Oh, setting sun!

As in thy red rays thou dost sink to night,

So in his red blood Cassius' day is set. Shakespeare.

MORE. n. f. [A kind of comparative from some or much.]

1. A greater quantity; a greater degree. Perhaps some of these examples which are adduced under the adverb, with the before more, should be placed here; but I rather think the more to be adverbial.

Were I king,

I should cut off the nobles for their lands;

And my more having would be as a sauce

To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

An heroic poem requires some great action of war, and as much or more of the active virtue than the suffering. Dryden.

The Lord do so, and much more, to Jonathan. 1 Samuel.

Bright as dith the morning-star appear,
Out of the East, with flaming locks bedight,
To tell the dawning day is drawing near. Fanny Fern.

MOROSE. adj. [morosus, Latin.] Sour of temper; peevish; sullen.

Without these precautions, the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows sullen and morose, the woman impertinent. Addison's Spectator.

Some have deserved censure for a morose and affected taciturnity, and others have made speeches, though they had nothing to say. Watts on the Mind.

MOROSITY. adv. [from morose.] Sourly; peevishly.

'Too many are as morosely positive in their age, as they were childishly in their youth.

Government of the Tongue.

MOROSINESS. n. f. [from morose.] Sourness; peevishness.

Take care that no sourness and morosities mingle with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

Learn good humour, never to oppose without just reason; abate some degree of pride and morosities. Watts.

MOROSITY. n. f. [morositas, Lat. from morose.] Moroseness; sourness; peevishness.

Why then be sad,
But entertain no morosity, brothers, other
Than a joint burthen laid upon us. Shakespeare.

Some morosities
We must expect, since jealousy belongs
To age, of scorn, and tender sense of wrongs. Dunham.

The pride of this man, and the popularity of that; the levity of one, and the morosity of another. Clarendon.

MORRIS. } n. f. [that is, moorish]
MORRIS-DANCE. } or moorish-dance.

1. A dance in which bells are gangled, or slaves or swords clashed, which was learned by the Moors, and was probably a kind of Pyrrhick or military dance.

The queen stood in some doubt of a Spanish invasion, though it proved but a moorish-dance upon our waves. Watts.

One in his catalogue of a feigned library sets down this title of a book, 'The moorish-dance of heretics.' Bacon.

The fountains and seas, with all their finny drove,
Now to the moon in wavering moorish move. Milton.

MORPHEW. n. f. [morphee, French, morpheus, low Latin; morpha, Italian.] A scurf on the face.

MORROW. n. f. [monxen, Saxon; morghen, Dutch.] The original meaning of morrow seems to have been morning, which being often referred to on the preceding day, was understood in time to signify the whole day next following.

1. The day after the present day.

I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
To have it with saying, good morrow. Shakespeare.

Thou
Canst pluck night from me, but not lend a morrow. Shakespeare.

The Lord did that thing on the morrow. Exod. ix. 6.

Peace, good reader, do not weep,
Peace, the lovers are asleep,
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And the eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they wake with the light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crowley.

To morrow you will live, you always cry,
In what country doth this morrow lie?
That 'tis to mighty long e'er it arrive:
Beyond the Indies does this morrow live?
'Tis so far-fetched this morrow, that I fear
'Twill be both very old, and very dear.
To morrow will I live, the fool does say,
To day itself's too late, the wife liv'd yesterday. Cowley.

2. To MORROW. [This is an idiom of the same kind, supposing morrow to mean originally morning: as, to night; to day.] On the day after this current day.

To morrow comes; 'tis noon; 'tis night:
This day like all the former flies;
Yet on he runs to seek delight
To morrow, till to night he dies. Prior.

3. To morrow is sometimes, I think improperly, used as a noun.

Our yesterday's to morrow now is gone,
And still a new to morrow does come on.
We by to morrows draw out all our store,
Till the exhausted well can yield no more. Cowley.

To morrow is the time when all is to be rectified. Spectator.

MORSE. n. f. [phoca] A sea-horse.

MORTAL. adj. [mortalis, Latin; mortel, French.]

1. Subject to death; doomed some time to die.

Nature does require
Her times of preservation, which, perforce,
Her frail son amongst my brethren mortal
Must give my attendance to. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. 1 Cor. xv. 53.

Heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love!
Which of ye will be mortal to redeem
Man's mortal crime; and just, th' unjust to save. Milton.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die;
From that day mortal: and this happy state Shalt lose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Deadly;

2. Deadly; destructive; procuring death.

Come all you spirits
That tend on mortal thought, unless me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, top full
Of cruelty. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mortalst poisons practis'd by the West Indians, have some mixture of the blood, fat, or flesh of man. Eaton.

The trust
Of this forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world, and all our woe.
Milton.
Some circumstances have been great dilcuragers of mad, and other, absolutely mortal to it.
Temple.

Hope not, but man! unquestion'd hence to go,
For I am Pal-mon, thy mortal too. Dryden.

'Tis every sin of itself be mortal, yet all are not equally mortal, but some more, some less.
Parkins.

5. Human; belonging to man.

They met me in the day of success: and I have learned by the perfid report, they have more in them than mortal knowledge. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Macbeth.

Shall I've the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time and to custom. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The voice of God

To mortal ear is dreadful, they believe,
That Motes might report to them his will,
And terror cease. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Success, the mark no mortal wit,
Or surest hand can always hit. Boswell.

No one enjoyment but is liable to be lost by ten thousand accidents, out of all mortal power to prevent. South's Sermons.

dicrous word.

Adrian mortally envied poets, painters, and arti-ficers, in works wherein he had a vein to excel.
Bacon's Essays.

Know all, who would pretend to my good grace,
I mortally dislike a damning face. Granville.

MORTAR. n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, French.]1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the continuation of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar.
Ray on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon, out of which bombs are thrown.

Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd
On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd. Granville.

MORTAR. n. f. [morter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is wash'd in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advise, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little time, that the mortar may not be long before it is used.

I will tread this unbolited villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him. Shakespeare's Lear.
They had brick for stone, and lime for mortar.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other. Mortimer.

MORTGAGE. n. f. [mort and gage, Fr.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made,
Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd.
Dryden.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arluinct.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and saves th' expensive coach.
Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year. Bacon.

To MORTGAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Let men contrive how they disentangle their mortgag'd souls. Deay of Fifty.

They make the widow's mortgag'd ox their prey. Sandys.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living, has forced them to mortgage their best mannors. Arbutnot.

Some have his lands, but none his treasure's store, Lands unmanur'd by us, and mortgag'd o'er and o'er. Hart.

MORTGAGE. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that takes or receives a mortgage.

An act may pass for public registries of land,
by which all purchasers or mortgagers may be secured
of all monies they lay out. Temple's Miscell.

MORTGAGER. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from to death, to mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life? Hammond.

These murmurings, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring.

Government of the Tongue.

MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, French; from mortify]1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiate, or intenc colds. Bacon.
My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds, immedicable,

Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistics.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quick-silver is mortified with turpentine. Bacon.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkaliescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable. Tibell.

You see no real mortification, or self denial, no eminent charity, no profound humility, no heavenly affection, no true contempt of the world, no Christian weakness, no sincere zeal, or eminent piety, in the common lives of Christians. Larve.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disorder'd by a tedious visit. L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the light of Munich, Augsburg, and Ratisbon. Addison on Italy.

To MORTIFY. v. a. [mortifier, French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

2. To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or spittle. Bacon.

He mortified pearls in vinegar, and drunk them up. Hakewill.

Oil of tartar per deliquium has a great faculty to find out and mortify acid spirits. Bryle.

3. To subdue inordinate passions.

The breath no sooner left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Suppress thy knowing pride,
Mortify thy learned lust,
Vain are thy thoughts, while thou thyself art dust.
Prior.

He modestly conjectures,
His pupil might be tur'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride. Swift.

4. To macerate or harash; in order to reduce

duce the body to compliance with the mind.

Their dear causes
Would to the bleeding and the gaim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh. Bacon.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see. Dryden.
With fasting mortify'd, worn out with tears,
And bent beneath the load of seventy years. Harte.
5. To humble; to depress; to vex.
Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.

Shakespeare.
He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown,
and transported by a smile. Addison's Guardian.
How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise to high as he thinks they ought. Addison's Spectator.

TO MORTIFY. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.
Try it with capon laid abroad, to see whether it will mortify and become tender sooner; or with dead flesh with water cast upon them, to see whether it will putrify. Bacon.

2. To be subdued; to die away.

3. To practise religious severities.
This makes him careful of every temper of humour, give alms of all that he hath, watch, and fast, and mortify, and live according to the strictest rules of temperance, meekness, and humanity. Law.

MORTISE. n. f. [mortaise, mortoise, Fr.]

A hole cut into wood that another piece may be put into it and form a joint.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements,
If it hath ruffian'd to upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortise? Shakespeare's Othello.

Under one skin are parts variously mingled, some with cavities, as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit cavities. Ray.

TO MORTISE. v. a.

1. To cut with a mortise; to join with a mortise.

'Tis a massy wheel,
To whose huge spoke ten thousand lesser things
Are mortis'd and ally'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
'The walls of spiders leg, are mad,
We'll mortis'd and finally laid. Drayton's Nymphid.

2. It seems in the following passage improperly used:

The one half of the ship being finished, and by help of a screw launched into the water, the other half was joined by great brass nails mortis'd with lead. Abutment on Coins.

MORTMAIN. n. f. [morte and main, Fr.]

Such a state of possession as makes it unalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand, in a hand that cannot shift away the property.

It were meet that some small portion of lands were allotted, since no more mortuaries are to be looked for. Spenser.

MORTPAY. n. f. [mort and pay.] Dead pay; payment not made.

This parliament was merely a parliament of war, with some statutes concluding therunto; as the severe punishing of mortpayers, and keeping back of soldiers wages. Bacon.

MORTRESS. n. f. [from mortier de sageffe
Skinner.] A dish of meat of various kinds beaten together.

A mortress made with the brawn of capons, stamped, strained, and mingled with like quantity of almond butter, is excellent to nourish the weak.
Bacon's Natural History.

MORTUARY. n. f. [mortuaire, French, mortuarium, Latin.] A gift left by a man at his death to his parish church for the recompence of his personal tythes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. Harri.

MOSAICK. adj. [mosaïque, French; supposed corrupted from musæus, Latin.]

Mosaick is a kind of painting in small pebbles, cockles, and shells of sundry colours; and of late days likewise with pieces of glass figured at pleasure, an ornament, in truth, of much beauty, and long life, but of most use in pavements and floorings. Wotton.

Each beauteous flower,
Iris all hues, roses, and jessamin, Rear'd high their flourish'd heads between, and wrought

Mosaick. Milton's Paradis. Lost.
The most remarkable remnant of it is a very beautiful mosaic pavement, the finest I have ever seen in marble; the parts are so well joined together, that the whole piece looks like a continued picture. Addison on Italy.

MOSCHATEL. n. f. [moschatellina, Lat.]
A plant. Miller.

MOSQUE. n. f. [mosquée, French; moscheit, Turkish] A Mahometan temple.

MOSS. n. f. [muscus, Lat. meos, Sax.]
A plant.

Though moss was formerly supposed to be only an excrement produced from the earth and trees, yet it is no less a perfect plant than those of greater magnitude, having roots, flowers, and seeds, yet cannot be propagated from seed by any art: the botanists distinguish it into many species: it chiefly flourishes in cold countries, and in the winter season, and is many times very injurious to fruit trees:
the only remedy in such cases, is to cut down part of the trees, and plough up the ground between those left remaining; and in the spring, in moist weather, you should with an iron instrument scrape off the moss. Macle.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but it may be better used as a rudiment of generation. Bacon.

Houses then were caves, or homely sheds,
With twining ozers kne'd, and moss then beds. Dryden.

Such mosses as grow upon walls, roof, of houses, and other high places, have seeds that, when shaken out of their vessels, appear like vapour or smoke. Ray on the Creation.

TO MOSS. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with moss.

An oak whose boughs were moss'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shakespeare.

Will these moss'd trees,
That have out-liv'd the eagle, pay thy herls,
And skip when thou point'st out? Shakespeare.

MOSSINESS. n. f. [from mossy.] The state of being covered or overgrown with moss.

The herbs watered at the top, sheweth the earth to be very cold, and so doth the mossiness of trees. Bacon.

MOSSY. adj. [from moss.] Overgrown with moss; covered with moss.

Old trees are more mossy far than young; for that the sap is not so thick as to rise all to the boughs, but trick by the way, and putrify out moss. Bacon's Natural History.

About the mossy brooks and springs,
And all interlurking beauteous things. Catchy.

The mossy fountains and the sylvan shades Delight no more. Pope's Musical.

MOST. adj. the superlative of more.

which he leans his hand when he paints.

Ainsworth.

MOSTLY. adv. [from most.] For the greatest part.

This image of God, namely, natural reason, if correctly or mostly directed, the right of government doth create. Bacon.

MOSTUARY. adv. [most and what.] For the most part. Obsolete.

God's promises being the ground of hope, and those promises being but seldom absolute, under condition, the Christian grace of hope must be proportioned and temperate to the promise, if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tyranny of hope. Harwood.

MOTION. n. f. Act of moving. Diect.

MOTE. n. f. [moet, Saxon; atomus, Lat.]
A small particle of matter; any thing proverbially little.

You find his mote, the king your mote d d fer;
But I have found no find in each of these. Lockington.

The little mote in the sun do ever stir, though there be no wind. Bacon's Natural History.

MOTE for might, or must. [moet, Dutch.] Obsolete.

winged insect that eats cloths and hangings.

All the vana Pentage fun in Ulysses' absence,
did but his throat full of moth. Shakespeare.

Every soldier in the wars should do as my sick man in his bed, wash every part out of his conscience. Shakespeare.

He a moth thing conformeth, as a garment that is moth eaten. J. J., xiii. 28

Let moth through pages, out their way,
Your way, your lives, your pipes be forgot,
And make of all an unvalued blot. Dryden's Juven.

MOTHER. n. f. [moeder, Saxon; mo- der, Danish; moeder, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has born a child; correlative to son or daughter.

Let thy mother rather feel thy pride, than lean Thy dangerous stoutness. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Come sit down every mother's son,
And breathe your parts. Shakespeare.

I had not so much of man in me,
But all my mother came into mine eye,
And gave me up to tears. Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. That which has produced any thing.

Air, poor country! It can't Be call'd our mother, but our giver. Shakespeare.

MUMMY. n. f. [mumi, French; mamia,

Latin; denoted by almasius from amo

mum, by Barbort from the Arabick.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy. One is the dried flesh of human bodies embow'd with myrrh and spices;

the other is the liquor running from such mum- mers when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps; this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vial, or suffered to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a snail texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface, it is of a strong but not agreeable smell. the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscid fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its induced state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is exceedingly dear, and the first sort is cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen for plentiful in that part of the world, and adding spices, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices be exhale'd, and the embalming matter be penetrat'd. Hall's Mat. Med.

Was d'ed in mummy, which the skilful

Confer'd of maulen hearts. Shakespeare's Othello.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years.

Bacon's Natural History.

And threw the tops all in the sexton's face. Shakspeare.

MUSCLE. n. f. [muscle, French; mus- culus, Latin; muscula, Saxon.]

1. Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, inclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vesicles or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries, and nerves to open, for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre:
the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.

The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.

MUSK. n. f. [muschio, Italian; muske, French.]

Musk is a dry, light and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, sometimes from Tonquin and Cochinchina: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the crea-

1. Mouldy; spoiled with damp; moist and fetid.

Was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw.

Pistaches, to thy be good and not musty, made into a milk, are an excellent nourisher.

Let these that go by water to Gravesend prefer living upon the boards, than on musty infectious straw.

2. Stale; spoiled with age.

While the glass grows—the proverb is somewhat musty.

3. Vapid with flatness.

Let not, like Næmus, every error pass;
The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass.

1. Dull; heavy; wanting activity; wanting practice in the occurrences of life.

Xantippe being married to a foolish man who has no knowledge of the world, is forced to take his affairs into her own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty and unfit for conversation.

MUTABILITY. n. f. [mutabilité, French;
mutabilis, Latin.]

1. Changeableness; not continuance in the same state.

The mutability of that end, for which they are made, maketh them also changeable.

My fancy was the air, most free,
And full of mutability,
Big with chimeras.

Plato confesses that the heavens and the frame of the world are corporeal, and therefore subject to mutability.

2. Inconstancy; change of mind.

are no fit matter for this present argument.

To make plants grow out of the sun or open air is a great mutation in nature, and may induce a change in the feed.

MUTE. adj. [mutus, Fr mutus, Latin.]
1. Silent; not vocal; not having the use of voice.

Why did he reason in my soul implant,
And speech, the effect of reason? To the mute
My speech is lost, my reason to the brute.

Such as the majesty of grief destroys.
2. Having nothing to say.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility.

All that mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts.

All the heavenly choir from mute,
And silence was in heaven.

The whole people of ignoble crowd,
Made to my questions, in my prates loud,
Echo'd the word.

MUTE. n. f.
1. One that has no power of speech.

Either our history shall with full mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongue silent mouth.

Your mute I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let me never not be.

He that never hears a word spoken, no wonder if he remain speechless; as one must do, who from an infant should be bred up amongst mutts, and have no teaching.

Let the figures, to which art cannot give a voice, imitate the mutts in their actions.

2. A letter which without a vowel can make no sound.

Grammarians note the easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid, which doth not therefore necessarily make the preceding vowel long. Hoeder.
TO MUTR. v. n. [mutir, French.] To dung as birds.

Mine eyes being open, the sparrows mutr'd warm dung into mine eyes. Tob. ii. 10.

I could not fright the crows,
 Or the least bird from muting on my head.

Ben Jonson.

The bird not able to digest the fruit, from her inconverted muting ariseth this plant. Brown.

MUTELY. adv. [from mute.] Silently; not vocally.

Vol. II.

MUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mutinous.] Seditiousness; turbulence.

TO MUTINY. v. n. [mutiner, Fr.] To rise against authority; to make insurrection; to move sedition.

The spirit of my father begins to mutiny against this servitude. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The people mutiny, the tort is mine,
 And all the soldiers to my will incline. Waller.

When Cæsar's army mutinied, and grew to trouble some, no argument could appease them. South.

MUTINY. n. f. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.

The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.

I th' war,
 Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
 Most valour, spoke not for them. Shakespeare's Cor.

In most strange postures We've seen him set himself. Shakespeare.

—There is a mutiny in my mind. Shakespeare.

Let's than it the frame
 Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
 In mutiny had from their axle torn

The steadfast earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditions. Temple.

TO MUTTER. v. n. [muttre, mutrare, Latin.] To grumble; to murmur.

What would you ask me, that I would deny,
 Or stand to muttering on? Shakespeare's Othello.

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutter? Shakespeare.

Sky low'd, and muttering thunder some sad drops
 Wept, at completing of the mortal sin Original! Milton's Paradise Lost.

They may trespass, and do as they please, no man dare accuse them, not so much as mutter against them. Burton.

Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray
 Are rous'd, and clattering sticks cry, play, play,

Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
 And mutter to himself. ha, gens barbare!
 And it is well he mutters, well for him;
 Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.

When the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, it could not forbear muttering. Addison's Spect.

TO MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.

Amongst the soldiers this is muttered,

A hand large and red.

Will he who saw the soldier, muttonfist,
 And saw thee maul'd, appeal within the list
 To witness truth? Dryden's Juvenal.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, French; mutuus, Lat.] Reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.

It is a wild and want in hand,
 Fetching mad bands, bellowing and neighing loud,
 If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
 You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
 By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
 You run on each other's side are the same. Pope.

MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.

He never bore
 Like labour with the rest, where the other infra-

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,
 And mutually participate. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
 Who mutually hath answer'd my affection. Shakespeare.

The tongue and pen mutually visit one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Holbro.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in reflecting, reflecting and inflecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton Opticks.

They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security. Atterbury's Sermon.

May I the sacred pleasures know
 Of strict amity, nor ever want
 A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciprocity.

Villanous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities to marshal the way, hand at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.

MUZZLE. n. f. [muzeau, French.]

1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.

But ever anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a suit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Cibyn.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.

The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
 The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shakespeare.

Greyhounds, snowy fair,
 And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;
 With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.

TO MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.

The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. Leff' onge.

TO MUZZLE. v. a.

1. To bind the mouth.

This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I Have not the pow'r to muzzle him; therefore let Not wake him in his slumber. Shakespeare.

2

The bear, the boar, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And, muzzled though they seem, the mutts devour.
Dryden.

Through the town with slow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay.
2. To fuddle with the mouth close. A low word.

The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child. L'Estrange.

3. To restrain from hurt.

My dagger muzzled
Lest it should bite its matter, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakespeare.
MY, pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book: this book is mine.

Her feet she in my neck doth place. Spenser.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Bramhall.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection. Haller.

I shall present my reader with a journal. Addison.

sight.

MYRIAD. n. f. [μυριάς.]

1. The number of ten thousand.

2. Proverbially any great number.

Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief.

Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe fits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wut,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.

The mass of the people will not endure to be govern'd by Clodius and Cuius, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever to numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYRODALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Lat.]
A fruit.

The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste: they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures;
for it is sweet, and yet acrid. Bacon.

MYROLOGIST. n. f. [μυρολόγος and ωμολογία.]
One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, French.] A gum.

Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour with more or less of an admixture of yellow. Its taste is bitter and acrid with a peculiar aromatick flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: It is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name. Hill.

The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound.

I dropt in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wise man's Surgery.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.]

Made of the myrrhine stone.

How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imbols'd with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

MYRTIFORM. adj. [myrtus and form.]

Having the shape of myrtle.

MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Latin; myrte, French.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.

The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short starlike cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make thee bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle
Imbroided all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleop.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted, though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peacbam.

Nor can the mute the gallant Sidney pass,
The plume of war with early laurels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Tomson.

MYSELF. [my and self.]

1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it, that is, not I by proxy;
not another.

As his host,
I should against his murther shut the door,
Not be the knife myself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.

They have mist another pain, against which
I should have been at a loss to defend myself.
Swift's Examiner.

3. I is sometimes omitted, to give force to the sentence.

Myself shall mount the rostrum in his favour,
And try to gain his pardon. And. or.

MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Latin.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.

MYSTERIARCH. n. f. [μυστηριάρχης and αρχή.]
One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTERIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French;
from mystery.]

1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

God at last
To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd.

2. Artfully perplexed.

Those princes who were distinguished for mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift.

MYSTERIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]

1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.

Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor's Worshy Communicant.

Each their mysteriously was meant. Milton.
MYSTERIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.

My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor's Worshy Comm.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.

To MYSTERIZE. v. a. [from mystery.]

To explain as enigmas.

Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiack. Brown's Vulg. Ex.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; mystere, Fr.]

1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fully of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Cor.

Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day, and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

It God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the Trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.

To thy great comfort in this mystery of all opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Important truths still let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Granville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Wauberton, be written mystery, from mestier, French, a trade.

And that which is the noblest mystery,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Spenser.
Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, obsequances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.

MYSTICAL. adj. [mysticus, Latin.]

MYSTICK. adj. [mysticus, Latin.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor, concerning the mystical way to heaven. Hooker.

From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker.

2. Involving some secret meaning; em-blematical.

Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move
In mystick dance not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light.

It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor's Worshy Com.
It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet.

3. Obscure; secret.

Let new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystick rolls of fate.

MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till, mystically join'd, but one they be.

Donne.
MYSTI-

MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.

MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.]
Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mytho- logical.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.]
A relator or expofitor of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings. Creech.

It was a celebrated problem among the ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris.

TO MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mytho- logy.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μῦθος and λόγος; mythologie, Fr.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance, it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakspeare.
The meanest sculptor in th' Asilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the various functions they are put to; and defend the numerous nerves and tendons that are under them. Ray.

2. The talons of birds; the claws or paws of beasts.

3. A spike of metal by which things are fastened together.

N A K

As one nail by strength drives out another;
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakspeare.

For the body of ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them, and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails,
to fasten them together. Bacon.

The load-stone mines in the shore of India, are so placed in abundance and vigour, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Brown.

A broken nail
Hung by the handle, on a driven nail. Dryden.

An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.

4. A stud; a boss.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

5. A measure of length; two inches and a quarter.

6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I once supposed it from a counter studded with nails, but have since found in an old record, solvere super unguem. It therefore means into the hand.

We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift's Poems.

TO NAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with nails.

To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton.
He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespied,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

2. To stud with nails.

In golden armour glorious to behold,
The rivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

trade is to forge nails; a nail-maker.

NAKED. adj. [nacod, Saxon.]

1. Wanting clothes; uncovered; bare.

N A K

A philosopher being asked in what a wife man differed from a fool? answered, send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon.

He pitying how they stood
Before him naked to the air, that now
Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.

Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakspeare.

Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden.

The truth appears to naked on my side,
That any perblind eye may find it out. Shakspeare.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.

Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men, saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude;
but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hobbes.

NAKEDLY. adv.

1. Without covering.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.

Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness to be conjoined in syllables. Miller.

3. Discoverably; evidently.

So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wise
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest-sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel.

NAKEDNESS. n. f. [from naked.]

1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shakspeare.
Not he their outward on y, with the skins
Of beasts; but inward nakedness, much more.

N A M

Opprobrious with his robe of righteousness
 Arraying, cover'd from his Father's sight. Milton
 I entreat my gentle readers to few on their tuckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison Thou to be strong must put off every dress,
 Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Pope

2. Want of provision for defence.
 Spies, to see the nakedness of the land are come. Genesis

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.

Why seek'st thou to cover with excuse
 That which appears in proper nakedness? Shakspeare
NALL. n. f. An awl, such as collar-makers or shoemakers use.

Whole bridle and saddle, with leather and nall,
 With collars and harness. Tupper

NAME. n. f. [nama, Saxon; naem, Dutch.]

1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?
 —Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
 —No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
 Than any is in hell.

—My name's Macbeth. Shakspeare
 He called them names after the names his father had called them. Gen. xxi. 18.

Thousands there were in darker fame that dwell,
 Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn. Dryden

2. The term by which any kind or species is distinguished.

What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
 By any other name would smell as sweet. Shakspeare
 If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke

3. Person.

They list with women each degenerate name,
 Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden

4. Reputation; character.

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind. Johnson

5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.

What men of name resort to him?
 Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
 And Rie ap Ithons with a valiant crew,
 And many others of great name and worth. Shakspeare

Visit eminent persons of great name abroad, to tell how the life agreeth with the tune. Bacon

Here rest thy bones in rich Helena's plains,
 Thy name, till all age off can have, remains. Dryden

A hundred knights
 Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name. Dryden

These shall be towns of mighty fame, Tho' now they lie obscure, and land without a name. Dryden

Bastulus is of great name, whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers, as Papinian was among the ancients. Baker

6. Power delegated; imputed character.

In the name of the people,
 The power of us is not in us, we are but their slaves. Shakspeare

Shakspeare's Civilianus

N A M

Like the watermen of Thames
 I row by, and call them names. Swift's Miscel.
To NAME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To discriminate by a particular appellation imposed.

I mention here a son of the king's whom Florisel
 I now name to you, and with speed to pace
 To speak of Peridita. Shakspeare

Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wait thou name'd after any of them. Top. iii. 8.

His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived. Luke, ii. 21.

Thus was the building left Ridiculous, and the work, Confusion, nam'd.

2. To mention by name.

Accustom not thy mouth to swearing: neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One. Eccles.
 My tongue could name what'er I saw. Milton

Those whom the tables name of monstrous size.

3. To specify; to nominate.

Did my father's godson seek your life?
 He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar. Shak.

Bring me him up whom I shall name. Sam.
 Let any one name that proposition, whose terms or ideas were either of them innate. Locke

4. To utter; to mention.

I let my name be named on them. Gen. xlviii.

5. To entitle.

Celestial, whether among the thrones, or nam'd
 Of them the highest, Milnes

NAMELESS. adj. [from name.]

1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.

On the cold earth lies the unregarded king,
 A leader, carcase, and a rambling thing. Denham

The milky way,
 Fram'd of many nameless stars. Mallet

Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
 And, sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust,
 Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
 To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes. Pope

2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.

Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens. Att. lxxxv.

Such imagery of greatness ill became
 A nameless dwarf, or an unknown name. Harte

NAMELY. adv. [from name.] Particularly; specially; to mention by name.

It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed, namely, that the providence for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice. Harker

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
 To none of these, except it be the last;
 Namely, some love that drew him off from home. Shakspeare

The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life, and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very suspicious manner to do the deed, advised her to go lets abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody. Bacon

For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of diving in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question. Addison

Solomon's choice does not only instruct us in that point of history, but furnishes out a very fine moral to us, namely, that he who applies his heart to wisdom, does at the same time take the most proper method for gaining long life, riches, and reputation. Addison's Guardian

NAMEK. n. f. [from name.] One who calls or knows any by name.

NAMELESS. n. f. One that has the same name with another.

N A P

Not does the dog-fish at sea, much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or namefake, in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes: they can indeed see the light, as is said of their namefakes; but immediately shut their eyes. Addison

NAP. n. f. [hneppan, Saxon, to sleep.]

1. Slumber; a short sleep. A word ludicrously used.

Mopsa sat swallowing of sleep with open mouth, making such a noise, as no body could lay the stealing of a nap to her charge. Sidney

Let your bounty take a nap, and I will awake it anon. Shakspeare

The fun had long since in the lap
 Of Thetis taken out his nap. Hudibras

So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap. L. Esquaire

2. [hneoppa, Saxon.] Down; villous substance.

Amongst those leaves she made a butterfly
 With excellent device and wondrous flight;
 The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
 The silken down, with which his back is dight. Spenser

Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it. Shak.

Plants, though they have no prickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves, which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance. Bacon

Al! where must needy poet seek for aid,
 When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
 His only coat! where dust confus'd with rain
 Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain. Swift

To NAPP. v. a. [hneppan, Saxon.] To sleep; to be drowsy or secure; to be supinely careless.

They took him napping in his bed. Hudibras
 A wit took a dog napping at his master's door. L. Esquaire

What is seriously related by Helmont, that wool linen, steep'd in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into meal, without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were there taken napping just when they had made an end of their good cheer. Bentley

NAPTAKING. n. f. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.

Naptaking, assaults, spoilings, and firing, have in our forefathers' days, between us and France, been common. Carter

NAPE. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.
 Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Junius, with his usual Greek sagacity, from νάπη, a bill; perhaps from the same root with knob.] The joint of the neck behind.

Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves. Shakspeare

Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape
 of his neck. Bacon

 herb.

NAPHTHA. n. f. [naphtha, Latin.]

Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating

ing smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire. Hill's Mas. Mod.

Stiabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and springs. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, though it be generally black, and differs little from Petroleum. Woodward.

NAPPEINESS. n. f. [from nappy.] The quality of having a nap.

NAPKIN. n. f. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, Tonsisque ferunt mantilia villis; naperia, Italian.]

1. A cloth used at table to wipe the hands. By art were weaved nappins, shirts, and coats, incontinentible by fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors. The same matter was woven into a nepkin at Louvain, which was cleaned by being burnt in the fire. Wilkins.

Nappins, Heliogabalus had of cloth of gold, but they were most commonly of linen, or felt wool. Arbuthnot.

NATURALNESS. n. f. [from natural.]

1. The state of being given or produced by nature.

The naturalness of a desire, is the cause that the satisfaction of it is pleasure, and pleasure importunes the will; and that which importunes the will, puts a difficulty on the will refusing or forbearing it. South.

2. Conformity to truth and reality; not affectation.

He must understand what is contained in the temperament of the eyes, in the naturalness of the eyebrows. Dryden.

Horace speaks of these parts in an ode, that may be reckoned among the finest for the naturalness of the thought, and the beauty of the expression. Addison.

NATURE. n. f. [natura, Latin; nature, French.]

1. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world.

Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shakespeare's King Lear.

When it was said to Anaxagoras, the Athenians have condemned you to die; he said, and Nature them. Bacon.

Let the position Nature mount, and let
The coachman Art be set. Crowley.
Heav'n bestows

At home all riches that wise Nature needs. Cowley.

Simple Nature to his hope has giv'n,
Beyond the cloud-topp'd hill an humbler heav'n. Pope.

2. The native state or properties of any thing, by which it is discriminated from others.

Why leap'd the hills, why did the mountains
shake,

What ail'd them their fix'd natures to forsake? Cowley.

Between the animal and rational province, some animals have a dark resemblance of the influxes of reason: so between the corporeal and intellectual world, there is man participating much of both natures. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The nature of brutes, besides what is common to them with plants, doth consist in having such faculties, whereby they are capable of apprehending external objects, and of receiving pain or pleasure from them. Wilkins.

3. The constitution of an animated body.

Nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy. Shakespeare.

We're not ourselves,

When nature, being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Disposition of mind; temper.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowliness but his unkind daughters. Shak.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harm,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices ride easy. Shakespeare's King Lear.

5. The regular course of things.

My end

Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence. Shak.

6. The compass of natural existence.

If their dam may be judge, the young ages are the most beautiful things in nature. Glanville.

7. The constitution and appearances of things.

The works, whether of poets, painters, moralists, or historians, which are built upon general nature, live for ever; while those which depend for their existence on particular customs and habits, a partial view of nature, or the fluctuation of fashion, can only be coeval with that which first raised them from obscurity. Reynolds.

8. Natural affection, or reverence; native sensations.

Have we not seen

The murdering son ascend his parent's bed,
Thro' violated nature force his way,
And stain the sacred womb where once he lay? Pope.

9. The state or operation of the material world.

He binding nature fast in fate,
Left conscience free and will. Pope.

10. Sort; species.

A dispute of this nature caused mischief in abundance betwixt a king and an archbishop. Dryden.

11. Sentiments or images adapted to nature, or conformable to truth and reality.

Only nature can please those tastes which are unprejudiced and refined. Addison.

Nature and Home were, he found, the same. Pope.

12. Physicks; the science which teaches the qualities of things.

Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night,
God said, let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various,

and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomized.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans; v. Nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whole account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature at its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, as when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be exprest by saying, the man was born so, or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature, for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things, corporeal, as, nature make the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order, or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one; as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or natura left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God, as, there is no phoenix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the world, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of semi-deity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all.

Boyle's True Inquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

NATURALLY n. f. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. A word not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturality. Brown.

NAVAL adj. [naval, French; navalis, Latin.]

1. Consisting of ships.

Encamping on the main,
Our naval army had besieged Spain,
They that the whole world's monarch by design'd,
Are to their ports by our bold fleets confin'd. Waller.
As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world at home pay. Prior.

2. Belonging to ships.

Maisters of such numbers of strong and valiant men, as well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.

NAVE n. f. [nav, Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.

Out, out, thou strumpet nature! all you gods
In general synod take away her power,
Break all the spokes and felloes from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heaven,
As low as to the fiends! Shakespeare's Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Rais.

2. [From navis, navis, old French.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Atterbury's Parergon.

NAVEL n. f. [napela, navela, Saxon.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly by which embryos communicate with the parent.

Imbradden addrest

His javeline at him, and so ript his navill, that the woman,

As endlessly it shut his eye, so open'd on the ground,

It pour'd his entrails. Chapman.

As children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the navel: here they feed not so. Davies.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments. Brown.

Me from the womb the midwife muse did take;
She cut my navel. Cowley.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the succundines, and parted from the navelstring. De Ham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being next to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades, a forcerer dwells. Milt.

NAVELGALL n. f.

Navelgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle sitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NAVELWORT n. f. [cotyledon.] A plant. It hath the appearance of houseleek.

Miller.

NA'VEW n. f. [napus, Latin; navet, navau, French.] A plant. It agrees in most respects with the turnep, but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. In the isle of Ely the species which is wild is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAUGHT adj. [napt, naphipt, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad, corrupt; worthless: it is now hardly used but in ludicrous language.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught.

Hobbs.

Thy sister, naught. Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shak.

NAUGHTY n. f. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written nought. See AUGHT and UGHT.

Re; you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench.

Shakespeare.

NAUGHTILY adv. [from naughty.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NAUGHTINESS n. f. [from naughty.] Wickedness; badness. Slight wickedness or perverseness, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own, and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I both do. Sidney.

NAUGHTY adj. The same with naught. 1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney.

Thet; naughty times

Put bars between the owners and their rights.

Shakespeare.

How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shaksp.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,

But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAVICULAR adj. [navicularis, Latin; naviculaire, French.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossacuneiformia. Dist.

NAVIGABLE adj. [navigable, Fr. navigabilis, Lat.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh.

Many have motioned to the council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this small isthmus, so to shorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. Heylin.

Almighty Jove surveys
Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NAVIGABLENESS n. f. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

TO NAVIGATE v. n. [navigo, Latin; naviger, French.] To sail; to pass by water.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean.

Arbut not on Coins.

TO NAVIGATE v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

The Phœnicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean.

NAVIGATION n. f. [navigation, French, from navigate.]

1. The act or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever. Racine.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation.

Monte.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone.

Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended.

Arbut not on Coins.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Thou' you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, tho' the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare.

The continuance may seem difficult, because the submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surmounted by the boldness of many navigators.

Temple.

NAU'LAGES n. f. [naulum, Latin.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAU'MACHY n. f. [naumachie, Fr. naumachia, Lat.] A mock sea fight.

TO NAU'SEATE v. n. [from nausea, Latin.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it.

Watts on the Mind.

TO NAU'SEATE v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are any'd up in one age, which are decay'd and nauseated in another. Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauseates the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

The patient nauseates and loaths wholesome foods. Blackmore.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her as if he were nauseated, then gave her a look with his tail. Swift.

NAUSEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Latin; nausée, French.] Loathsome; disgust-ful; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
And from those guides our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Derham.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAUSEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseous that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth.

NAUSEOUSNESS. n. s. [from nauseous.] Loathfomeness; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness, but as a mounted cattle, he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Auguzzebe.

NAUTICAL. adj. [nauticus, Lat.] Per-NAUTICK. s. taining to sailors.

surer of the navy for his majesty's use. Clarendon.

The narrow seas can scarce their navy bear,
Or crowded vessels can their soldiers hold. Dryden.

NAY. adv. [na, Saxon, or na aye.]

1. No; an adverb of negation.
Disputes in wrangling spend the day,
Whilst one says only yea, and t'other nay. Denham.

2. Not only so, but more. A word of amplification.

A good man always profits by his endeavour, yea, when he is absent; nay, when dead, by his example and memory; so good authors in their style. Ber Jon's Discovers.

He catechized the children in his chamber, giving liberty nay invitation to as many as would, to come and hear. Fell.

This is then the alloy of Cvid's writings, which is sufficiently recompensed by his other excellencies; nay, this very fault is not without its beau-
Vol. II.

ties; for the most severe censor cannot but be pleased. Dryden.

If a son should strike his father, not only the criminal but his whole family would be rooted out, nay, the inhabitants of the place where he lived would be put to the sword, nay, the place itself would be razed. Addison's Spectator.

3. Word of refusal.

They have beaten us openly uncondemned, being Romans, and have cast us into prison; and now do they thrust us out pively? nay verily;
but let them come themselves and fetch us out.

The fox made several excuses, but the flock would not be said nay; so that at last he promised him to come. L'Estrange.

He that will not when he may,
When he would he shall have nay. Prov.

NAVYWORD. n. s. [nay and word.]

plural neaves.
Give me thy neaf, Monsieur Mustardseed. Shak.

To NEAL. v. a. [oncelan, Saxon, to kindle.] To temper by a gradual and regulated heat.

The workmen let it cool by degrees in such re-lentings of fire, as they call their nealing heats; lest it should shiver by a violent succeeding air in the room of fire. Dugly.

This did happen for want of the glasses being gradually cooled or nealed. Boyle.

If you file, engrave, or punch upon your steel,
neal it first, because it will make it softer, and consequently work easier. The common way is to give it a blood red heat in the fire, then let it cool of itself. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

To NEAL. v. n. To be tempered in fire.
Reduction is chiefly effected by fire, wherein if they stand and neal, the imperfect metals vapour away. Bacon.

Accidents, which however dreadful at a distance,
at a nearer view lost much of their terror. Fell.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

Whether they neare liv'd to the best times,
When man's Redeemer bled for human crimes;

Whether the hermits of the desert fraught
With living practice, by example taught. Harte.

2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world should know them to be the best, and to know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker.

3. Direct; straight; not winding.

Taught to live the nearest way. Milton.
To measure life, learn then betimes, and know Toward solid good what leads the nearest way. Milt.

4. Close; not rambling; observant of style or manner of the thing copied.

Hannibal Cato's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two-lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

TO NECESSITATE. v. a. [from necessitas, Lat.]

To make necessary; not to leave free; to exempt from choice.

Hast thou proudly ascribed the good thou hast done to thy own strength, or imputed thy fins and follies to the necessitating and inevitable decrees of God? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

The marquis of Newcastle being pressed on both sides, was necessitated to draw all his army into York. Clarendon.

Man seduc'd,
And flatter'd out of all, believing lies
Against his Maker: no decree of mine
Concurring to necessitate his fall. Milton.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Neither the Divine Providence, or his determination, persuasions, or inflexions of the understanding or will of rational creatures, doth deceive the understanding or pervert the will, or necessitate or incline either to any moral evil. Ilac.

The politician never thought that he might fall dangerously sick, and that sickness necessitate his removal from the court. South.

Th' Eternal, when he did the world create
And other agents did necessitate;
So what he order'd they by nature do;
Thus light things mount, and heavy downward go.
Man only boasts an arbitrary state. Dryden.

The perfections of any person may create our veneration; his power, our fear; and his authority arising thence, a fervile and necessitated obedience; but love can be produced only by kindness. Rogers.

NECESSITATION. n. f. [from necessitate.]
 The act of making necessary; fatal compulsion.

This necessity, grounded upon the necessitation of a man's will without his will, is so far from lessening those difficulties which flow from the fatal destiny of the Stoicks, that it increaseth them.

Where the law makes a certain heir, there is a necessitation to one; where the law doth not name a certain heir, there is no necessitation to one, and there they have power or liberty to choose.

NECESSITATED. adj. [from necessity.] In a state of want. Not used.

This ring was mine, and when I gave it Helen, I had her, if her fortunes ever stood

Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shak.

He saw heaven's blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd

The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright

The way to Beth lem, and as boldly blaz'd,
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night.

Crashaw.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day,

With rosy wings to richly bright,
As if he scorn'd to think of night,

When a ruddy storm, whose foul
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,

Cald for an untimely night
To blot the newly plow'd light. Crashaw.

Some time, whose broad smooth leaves together
fold,

And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-come shame,

There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton.

The new-created world, which came in heav'n Long had foretold. Milton's Paradise Lost.

His evil

Thou wast, and from thence createst more good,
Wastest this new-made world, another heav'n.

Milton.

All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter
hair;

All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire.

Cowley.

If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray on the Creation.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded.

Burnet's Theory.

New-sound lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet's Theory.

If they be little images that please. Dryden

On the south a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope

The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high flying; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a senator and a saint.

Swift's Miscel

NICK. n. f. [from nich.] Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]

1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.

That great instrument of state suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some politick respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick.
Horace's Pical Forest

What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Suckling

That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick. Denham

Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while,
She'll after frown him in the nick
Of all his plumes a dog trick. Hudibras

And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engrav'd in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them
Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them.

This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gaining of a point. L'Estrange

NICKNAME. n. f. [nom de nique, Fr.]

A name given in scoff or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.

The time was, when men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nickname. Ben Jonson

My mortal enemy hath not only falsely invited me to be a feigned re son, giving me nick- names, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the pines with whom I have been retained. Bacon's Henry VII

So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word got from her, but the same nickname in derision. L'Estrange

To NICKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.

You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shak

Less seem these facts which treatens nick me force, Dentam

To NICKSTATE. v. a. [nick, Latin.] To wink.

NIDOROUS. adj. [nidoreux, from nidor] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.

Incense and nidoreux smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contritition of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eruptions with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidoreux, or fetid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs.

NIDOROSITY. n. f. [from nidoreux.] Eruption with the taste of undigested roast-meat.

The cure of this nidorosity is, by vomiting and purging.

NIDULATION. n. f. [nidulator, Lat.] The time of remaining in the nest.

The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostic of halcyons, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again, more especially remarking in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young.

NIECE. n. f. [niece, niepce, French; nepotis, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.

My niece Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster.

While he thus his niece betrays,
About our isle he builds a wall.

NIGGARD. n. f. [ninggr, Islandick.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a fordid, avaricious, parsimonious fellow.

Then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud. Let some unjust niggards make wares to spoil thy beauty.

Be not a niggard of your speech.

Save him as a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth.

Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.

NIGGARD. adj.

1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.
One she found
With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whose niggard fate
Had set him far below her high estate.

2. Sparing; wary.
Most free of question, but to our demands
Niggard in his reply.

To NIGGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To stint; to supply sparingly.

The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest.

NIGGARDISH. adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice.

NIGGARDLINESS. n. f. [from niggardly.] Avarice; fordid parsimony.

Niggardliness is not good husbandry, nor generosity, profusion.

NIGGARDLY. adj. [from niggard.]

1. Avaricious; fordidly parsimonious.
Where the owner of the house will be bountiful,
It is not for the steward to be niggardly.

Love, a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities, must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer.

Why are we so niggardly to stop at one fifth?
Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and double our money?

Providence, not niggardly but wise,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise.

Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet.

2. Sparing; wary.
I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question.

NIGGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.

I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me sight of her.

NIGGARDNESS. n. f. [from niggard.] Avarice; fordid parsimony. Not used.

All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so flutish a vice.

NIGH. prep. [nȳp, Saxon.] At no great distance from.

They thence
Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds.

Nigh this recess, with terror they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannic sway.

NIGH. adv.

1. Not at a great distance, either in time or place, or course of events; when it is used of time, it is applied to time future.

He was sick nigh unto death.

2. To a place near.
Mordecai sent letters both nigh and far.

He drew nigh and to me held,
Ev'n to my mouth, of that same fruit held part,
Which he had pluck'd.

I will defer that anxious thought,
And death, by fear, shall not be nigher brought.

3. Almost; as, he was nigh dead.

NIGH. adj.

1. Near; not distant; not remote: either in time or place.

The figtree putteth out leaves, summer is nigh.

The loud tumult shews the battle nigh.

2. Allied closely by blood.
He committed the protection of his son Asanes to two of his nigh kinsmen and assured friends.

His uncle or uncle's son, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family, may redeem him.

To NIGH. v. n. [from the participle.] To approach; to advance; to draw near.

Now day is done, and night is nighing fast.

NIGHLY. adj. [from nigh, the adjective] Nearly; within a little.

A man born blind, now adult, was taught by his touch to distinguish between a cube and a sphere of the same metal, and nighly of the same bigness.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess will be here this night.

In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn;

Then the curtains will be drawn;
And they waken with that light,
Whose day shall never sleep in night.

Dirce Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her languine gown by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.

2. The end of the day of life; death.

She clos'd her eyes in everlasting night.

There came into a bitter to-night of the children of Israel, to search out the country.

NIGHTBRAWLER. n. f. [night and brawler.] One who raises disturbances in the night.

You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a nightbrawler.

NIGHTCAP. n. f. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.

The rabblement houted, and clapt their thopt hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps.

Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the valleys below; and therefore they say in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief.

How did the humble swain detest
His prickly beard, and hairy breast!

His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face.

NIGHTCROW. n. f. [night and crow; nycticorax, Lat.] A bird that cries in the night.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time.

NIGHTDEW. n. f. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.

All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweet;
Even lust and envy sleep.

NIGHTDOG. n. f. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.

When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chac'd.

NIGHTDRESS. n. f. [night and dress.] The dress worn at night.

Chafes in arras, gilded emptiness;
These are the pleasures here.

NIGHTFLY. n. f. [night and fly.] Moth that flies in the night.

Why rather, sleep, lies thou in smoky erids,
And hush't with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfume'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shakspeare.
NIGHTFOUNDERED. adj. [from night and funder.] Lost or distressed in the night.

Either some one like us nightfoundered here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or at work,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows. Milton.

NIGHTGOWN. n. f. [night and gown.]
A loose gown used for an undress.

Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw
Her night-gown upon her. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
They have put me in a silk night-gown, and a gaudy fool's cap. Addison's Guardian.

To meagre muse-rid mope, adust and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope.

NIGHTHAG. n. f. [night and bag.]
Witch supposed to wander in the night.

Nor uglier follows the night-hag, when called
In secret, siding through the air, she comes Lur'd with the smell of infant-blood, to dance
With Lapland witches. Milton's Paradise Lost.

NIGHTINGALE. n. f. [from night and galen, Saxon, to sing; galm, Teuto-nick, is a sound or echo.]

1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.
I think,

The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakspeare.

Although the wren, thrush, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation;
and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown.

Thus the wile nightingale, that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring.
Waller.

2. A word of endearment.

My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds. Shakspeare.

NIGHTLY. adv. [from night.]

1. By night.

Thou, Sion! and the flowry brooks beneath,
That wait thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. Every night

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the list'ning earth
Repeats the story of her birth. Addison's Spectator.

NIGHTLY. adj. [from night.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.

May the stars and shining moon attend
Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel.
Dryden.

Soon as the flocks took off the nightly dews,
Two swains, whom long kept wakeful and the muse,
Pound'd o'er the whit'ning with their steely care.
Pope.

NIGHTMAN. n. f. [night and man.] One who carries away ordure in the night.

NIGHTMARE. n. f. [night, and according to Temple, mara, a spirit that, in the northern mythology, was related to dreams or suffocate sleepers.] A stor-bid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure of weight upon the breast.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,
He met the nightmare, and her name he told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakspeare.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are, dulness, drowsiness, vertiges, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares. A butcher.

NIGHTPIECE. n. f. [night and piece.]

A picture so coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.

He hung a great part of the wall with night- pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarcely forbear crying out fire. Addison.

NIGHTRAIL. n. f. [night and reigl, Sax.
a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a tatter of the church on the vita and populus. Addison on Mod.

NIGHTRAVEN. n. f. [night and raven;
nyctacorax.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.

The ill-fac't owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful dire.
Spenser.

I pray his bad voice bode no mischief:
I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
Come what plague would have come after it. Shak.

NIGHTROBBER. n. f. [night and robber.]
One who steals in the dark.

Highways should be fenced on both sides, whereby thieves and night-robbers might be more easily pursued and encountered. Spenser.

NIGHTRULE. n. f. [night and rule.] A tumult in the night.

How now, mad sprite,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove?
Shakspeare.

have been observed in any of the ancient sepulchres.
Wilkins's Dædalus.

NIGHTSHRIEK. n. f. [night and shriek.]
A cry in the night.

I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my sense would have cool'd
To hear a night shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir,
As life were in't. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

NIGHTTRIPPING. adj. [night and trip.]
Going lightly in the night.

Could it be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchange'd
In cradle cloaths, our children where they lay,
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shak.

NIGHTWALK. n. f. [night and walk.]
Walk in the night.

If in his night-walk he met with irregular scholars, he took their names, and a promise to appear, unfent for, next morning. Walton's Lives of Sanderfen.

NIBILITY. n. f. [nibilité, French; nibi- lum, Latin.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.

Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded, and this we call pure nibility, or mere nothing. Watts.

TO NILL. v. a. [from ne will, nillan, Saxon.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject.

Certes, said he, I nill thine offer'd grace,
Ne to be made so happy do intend,
Another bliss before mine eyes I place,
Another happiness, another end. Spenser.

In all affections the concurth still;
If now, with man and wife to will and nill
The self-same things, a note of concord be,
I know no couple better can agree. Ben Jonson.

NILL. n. f. The shining sparks of brass in trying and melting the ore.

TO NIM. v. a. [nemen, Dutch, to take.]

Into her scornful eyes. Shakspeare's King Lear.

You have dancing shoes
With nimble soles. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heaven
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;
'Tis the other's not, for his was not sincere. Milton.

Thro' the mid seas the nimble pinnacle sails,
Alas! from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.
NIMBLENESS. n. f. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition;
swiftness.

The hounds were straight uncoupled, and ere long the flag thought it better to trust to the *nimble*ness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and *nimble*ness. Sidney.

All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause laid to excel in *nimble*ness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing. Haker.

We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence and *nimble*ness. Shakspeare.

Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nim- *ble*ness and agility; but as he did not much cue for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom.
Addison's Guardian.

NIMBLEWITTEN. adj. [nimble and wit.]
Quick; eager to speak.

Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble- witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him, There is a great difference betwixt you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon.

NIPPLEWORT. n. f. [Lampiana.] A weed.

NI SI PRIUS. n. f. [In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is panelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ. So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Cowell.

NIT. n. f. [nitru, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses, in summer, not by stinging them, but only by th' insidious nose, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Darwin.

NITENCY. n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [From the Latin, nitro.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open. Boyle.

NITING. n. f. [or niding; see NIDING.] A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID. adj. [nitidus, Lat.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aquafortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

NITRE. n. f. [nitre, French; nitrum, Latin.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or nitric salt, is a crystalline substance.

cid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, imparting a peculiar taste of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other fossil substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls, these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an abstrusive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients.

Hill on Fossils.

Some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him. Milton.
Some steep their sled, and some in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil. Dryden.
NITROUS. adj. [nitreux, French; from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally. Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the element of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
My snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold to greedily pursue,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food.

Blackmore.

NITRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

Winter my theme confines; whole nitry wind
Shall crush the slabby nitre, and kennels bind. Gay.
NITTY. adv. [from nitty.] Loufly.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion, he was a man nit'ty needy, and therefore adventitious. Hn. ward.

sulphur, which otherways presents a pure and nivous white. Brown.

NIZY. n. f. [from niz.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, & did the trifling nizy
Go read Quintilian. Arton.

NO. adv. [na, Saxon]

1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courteous Antony,
Whom re't the word of no, wot an heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the scaff. Shakespeare.

Thenceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In silent tears, and honest kerry no. Shakespeare.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy's Sermons.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Baron.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth:—
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.—
—No, nor more fearful. Shakespeare.

Never more
This hand shall combat on the crooked shore:
No; let the Grecian power's oppress in fight,
Unhappy'd perish in their tyrant's sight. Dryd. Rom.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.

No not the bow which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dies. Wall r.
No. adj.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between me and thee. Gen.
Some dire misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend. Swift.
Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.
No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.
No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floors. Pope.
Our bard
No common object to your sight displays. Pope.
Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy. Brattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb:

as, the days are yet no shorter.
When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. Samuel, x. 14.
In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.
3. No one; none; not any one.

No one who doth good to thee only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Smalridge.

TO NOBILITAS. n. f. [nobilitas, Lat.]
To ennoble; to make noble.

NOBILITY. n. f. [nobilitas, Latin.]

1. Antiquity of family joined with splen-dour.

When I took up Boccaccio unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryd.
Long galleries of ancestors,
Challenge, nor wonder, or esteem from me,
"Virtue alone is true nobility." Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns. Nobility in England is extended to five ranks;
duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.

It is a purpos'd thing,
To curb the will of the nobility. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though the hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of his courage prevailed over it; and the desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney.
but ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility
To work my goddess so by thy invention,
On me to cast those eyes where shines nobility.

Sidney.

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakespeare.
They thought it great their sov'reign to controul,
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NO'BLE. adj. [noble, French; nobilis,
Latin.]

1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonalty.
From virtue first began,
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood,
But that which made him noble, made him good.

Dryd n.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious: both men and things.

Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 M.c. vi. 31.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Tim'rous. Milton.

A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milton.

Those two great things that engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.

My share in pale Pyrene I resign,
And claim no part in all the mighty nine:
Statues, with winding ivy crown'd, belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryden.

5. Magnificent; stately: as, a noble parade.

6. Free; generous; liberal.

7. Principal; capital: as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.

NO'BLE. n. f.

1. One of high rank.
Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Exodus.

How many nobles then should hold their places
That must strike fail to spirits of vile sort! Shak.
What the nobles once said in Parliament, Noli-mus leges Anglice mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments. Wickin.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves,
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expence of time or study.

Swift's Modern Education.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority: these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

Men should press forward in Fame's glorious chace,

Nobles look backward, and so lose the race.

Young.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight-pence; the sum of six and eight pence.
He coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold.

Camden.

Many fair promotions
Are daily given, to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakespeare.

Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight-pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.

NO'BLE Liverwort. [Hepatica.] A plant.

NO'BLEMAN. n. f. [noble and man.] One who is ennobled.

If I blush,

It is to see a nobleman want manners. Shakespeare.

The nobleman is he, whose noble mind
Is fill'd with unborn worth. Dryden's Wife of Bath.

NOBILITY. n. f. [from noble.]

1. Greatness; worth; dignity; magnanimity.

The nobleness of life

Is to do this; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleo.

Any thing

That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

True nobleness would

Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong.

Shakespeare.

He that does as well in private between God and his own soul, as in public, hath given himself a testimony that his purposes are full of honesty,
nobleness, and integrity. Taylor.

Greatness of mind, and nobleness, their seat
Build in her loveliest. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is not only a congruity herein between the nobleness of the faculty and the object, but also the faculty is enriched and advanced by the worth of the object. Hale.

You have not only been careful of my fortune, which was the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.

2. Splendour of descent; lustre of pedigree.

NOBLESSE. n. f. [noblesse, French.]

1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense.

For branch of noblesse, flower of chivalry,
That with your worth the world amazed make. Spenser.

2. Dignity; greatness.

Thou whose noblesse keeps one stature still,
And one true posture, thou bestig'd with ill.

Ben Jonson.

3. Noblemen collectively.

Let us haste to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience. Shakespeare.
I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England to be foremost in brave actions, which the nobles of France would never suffer in their peasants. Dryden.

NOBLY. adv. [from noble.]

1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.

Only a few and laurel did adorn
His colleague Cato, tho' nobly born:
He shar'd the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Marius won the glory of the day. Dryden.

2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.

Did he not straight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This face he could have scap'd, but would not

Honour for life; but rather nobly chose Death from their fears, than safety from his own.

Deham.

3. Grandly; splendidly.

There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument? Addison on Italy.

NOBODY. n. f. [no and body.] No one;
not any one.

This is the tone of our catch play'd by the picture of nobody. Shakespeare's Comedy.

It fell to Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was out of his office. Clarendon.

If in company you offer something for a jest,
and nobody seconds you on your own laughter,
you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgments; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift's Modesty.

NO'CENT. adj. [nocens, Latin.]

1. Guilty; criminal.

The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than no'cent;
yet as one, that might be the object of others' plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. Hurtful; mischievous.

His head, well-stor'd with subtle wiles;
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor no'cent yet, but on the grassy herb,
Fearless unfer'd he slept. Milton's Paradise L.

The warm limbeck draws

Salubrious waters from the no'cent brood. Philips.
They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its no'cent qualities. Watts on the Mind.

And noct his shaft, the ground whence all their future griefs did grow. Chapman

NOCTAMBULO. n. f. [nox and ambulo,
Latin.] One who walks in his sleep.

Respiration being carried on in sleep, is no argument against its being voluntary. What shall we say of noctambul's? There are voluntary motions carried on without thought, to avoid pain. Ascham.

NOCTIDIAL. adj. [noctis and ates, Lat.]

Comprising a night and a day.
The noctidial day, the lunar periodic month, and the solar year, are natural and universal, but in-commensurate each to another, and difficult to be reconciled. Holder.

NOCTIFEROUS. adj. [nox and fera.]

Bringing night. Dict.

NOCTIVAGANT. adj. [noctivagus, Lat.]

An account of what passes by night.

I have got a parcel of visions and other miscellanies in my noctuary, which I shall send to enrich your paper. Addison.

NOCTURN. n. f. [nocturne, Fr. nocturnus, Lat.] An office of devotion performed in the night.

The reliques being conveniently placed before the church-door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them, and the nocturn and the matins for the honour of the saints whose the re-liques are. Stillington.

NOCTURNAL. adj. [nocturnus, Latin.]

Nightly.

From gilded roof, depending lamps display
Nocturnal beams, that emulate the day. Dryden.

I beg leave to make you a present of a dream, which may serve to fill your readers till such time as you yourself shall gratify the public with any of your nocturnal discoveries. Addison.

NOCTURNAL. n. f. An instrument by which observations are made in the night.

That projection of the stars which includes all the stars in our horizon, and therefore reaches to the thirty eighth degree and a half of southern latitude, though its centre is the north pole, gives us a better view of the heavenly bodies as they appear every night to us, and it may serve for a nocturnal, and shew the true hour of the night. Watts.

To NOD. v. n. [Of uncertain derivation:
no, Greek; nuto, Latin; annutid, Welsh.]

1. To decline the head with a quick motion.

fine. Ben Jonson.

Or call up the master, and break his dull noddle.

My head's not made of brass,

As friar Bacon's noddle was. Hudibras.

He would not have it said before the people, that images are to be worshipped with latria, but rather the contrary, because the distinctions necessary to defend it are too subtle for their noddles. Stillington.

Come, master, I have a project in my noddle, that shall bring my mistress to you back again,
with as good will as ever she went from you.

Why shouldst thou try to hide thyself in youth?
Impartial Proserpine beholds the truth;

And laughing at so fond and vain a task,
Will strip thy hoary noddle of its mask. Addison.

Thou that art ever half the city's grace,
And add'st to solemn noddles, solemn pace. Forten.

Love knows no non-age, nor the mind. Crashaw.

We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that so which in truth is the world's nonage.
Glanville.

'Tis necessary that men should first be out of their nonage, before they can attain to an actual use of this principle, and withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Wilkins.

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretext, that alone would not avoid them. Hale.

After Chaucer there was a nonage, a nonage, a nonage, a nonage, before Walter and Denham were in being; and our numerals were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryden.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare.
Dryden.

NONCE. n. f. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from own or once; or from nutz, German, need or use: Junius derives it less probably from noiance; to do for the nonce being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent;

Saw you never;
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones. Ben Jonson.

A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones.
Cowley.

Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Cotton.

NONCONFORMITY. n. f. [non and con- formity.]

1. Refusal of compliance.

The will of our Maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it, a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines then actions to be morally good or evil.
Watts's Logic.

2. Refusal to join in the established religion.

Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church are so much stuck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the ground pillar and buttress of non- conformity. South.

The lady will plead the toleration which allows her nonconformity in this particular. Addison's Spectator.

NONCONFORMIST. n. f. [non and con- formist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.

On his death-bed he declared himself a non-con- formist, and had a fanatick preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

NONE. adj. [See one, nan, ne one, Sax.]

1. Not one: used both of persons and things.

Ye shall see when none pursueth you. Levi.
That killing power is none of thine,
I gave it to thy voice and eyes:

Thy sweets, thy graces, all are mine;
Thou art my star, shin'st in my skies. Carew.

That fowl, which is none of the lightest, can easily move itself up and down in the air without fluting its wings. Wilkins.

Another, which is none of the least advantages of hope is, its great efficacy in preserving us from sitting too high a value on present enjoyments.

Addison's Spectator.

2. Not any: no was in this sense used anciently before a consonant, and none before a vowel.

Six days shall ye gather it, but on the Sabbath
there shall be none. Exodus, xvi. 26.

Thy life shall hang in doubt, and thou shalt have none assurance of this life. Dexter's poetry, xxviii.

Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tumultuary motions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours. Burnet's Theory.

The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest. Felton on the Cliffs.

tically nothing.

My people would not hearken to my voice: and Israel would none of me. Psalms, lxxxi. 11.

5. None is always used when it relates to a substantive going before; as, we shall have no wine: wine we shall have none.

6. None seems originally to have signified, according to its derivation, not one, and therefore to have had no plural, but it is now used plurally.

Terms of peace were none
Vouchsaf'd. Milton.

In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.

Not think though men were none
That heav'n would want spectators, God want praise. Milton.

NONENTITY. n. f. [non and entity.]

1. Nonexistence; the negation of being.

When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its no-felt out of nonentity into something. Bentley.

2. A thing not existing.

There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.

We have heard, and think it pety that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity.
Arbutnot and Pope.

The more to aggravate the note, With a foul taylor's name stuff I thy throat. Shakespeare.

5. Account; information; intelligence; notice. Not used.

Like that from Naples Can have no note, unless the sun were post, The man's thimble's too slow. Shakespeare's Tempest.

In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place, so far forth consideration may be had of his merit, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery. Bacon.

6. State of being observed.

Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals. Bacon.

7. Tune; voice; harmonick or melodious sound.

These are the notes whereat are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls. Hooker.

The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note. Mil.

NOT

I now must change those notes to tragick. Mil.

You that can tune your sounding string so well, Of ladies beauties and of love to tell; Once change your note, and let your lute report The justest griet that ever touch'd the court. Walker.

One common note on either lyre did strike, And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike. Dryden.

8. Single sound in musick.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony! This universal frame began: From harmony to harmony, Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran, The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial regifter.

He will'd me In heedfull'st reservation to buildow them, As notes whose faculties inclusive were, More than they were in note. Shakespeare.

NOTER. n. s. [from note.] He who takes notice.

NOTHING. n. s. [no and thing; nothing, Scotch.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation: opposed to something.

It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself, and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing, then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Grego.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we ascribe an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense, so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it, but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Harris.

2. Nonexistence.

Mighty flames characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakespeare's Titus and Coriolanus.

3. Not any thing, no particular thing.

There shall nothing die. Jeremiah, ix. 4.

Yet had his aspect a being of love,
But such a face as promises him sincere. Dryden.

Philosophy wholly speculative is barren, and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

A thing at all was done, while any thing is mained undone. Shakespeare's Henry V.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady reflection brought to practice, God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his aid begged, nothing but this will enable you to God's acceptance. Wesley's Prayer for Deacons.

Words are made to declare something, where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something, but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or stupidity of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.

6. No importance; no use; no value

The outward show of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whereas some of our late too nice souls say, there is nothing in the solemn form of the church. Spears's Ireland.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah.

7. No possession of fortune.

A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspokeable estate. Shakespeare's Henry's Tale.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray.

9. A thing of no proportion.

The charge of making the ground, and other wife, is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon.

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance:

I had rather have one scratch my head 'till 'tis fun,
When the alum were stuck, than idly sit
To hear my nothing monster'd. Shakespeare.

My dear nothing, take your leave,

No longer must you be deceived. Grasshopper.

NOT

'Tis nothing, says the fool, but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.

Do I not see your dropful belly swell? Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to expiate multiplication of *nothing*s, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope's Letters.

Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace? Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth? Job, xxiv. 25.

Aurora, nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course. Kneller.

But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton.

NOTHINGNESS. n. s. [from nothing.]

1. Nihilism; nonexistence.

His art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness. Donne.

2. Nothing; thing of no value.

I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did seem to hurt his forested carcass. Hudibras.

NOTICE. n. s. [notice, French; notitia, Latin.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's misdeed is, what root it springs from. Locke.

This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.

How ready is envy to mingle with the notices
which we take of other persons! Watts.

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his duchess will be here. Shakespeare's King Lear.

NOTIFICATION. n. s. [notification, French; notification, Latin.]

1. Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.

Four or five touches, elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or lengthways, may, by agreement, give great variety of no figures. Hill on Speech.

2. To notify. v. a. [notify, French; notifico, Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker.

Good angels operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year:
a kind of standard by which we measure time. Hill.

NOTION. n. s. [action, French; notio, Latin.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the propagation of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men. Pascal.

The fiction of some beings which are not in nature, second nature, a the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden.

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude, but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to allude under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newson.

There is nothing made a more common subject

NOT

of discourse than nature and it's laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c.

Watts's Logic.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milton.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison.

Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings
Are lethargy'd. Shakespeare's King Lear.

So tall, as earthly notion can receive. Milton.

NOTIONAL. adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon.

Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance, for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glennville's Scripps.

NOTIONALITY. n. s. [from notional.]

Empyre, ungrounded opinion. A word
not in use.

I stood at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notional y. Glennville.

NOTIONALLY. adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.

The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, and standing and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Newson's Hist.

NOTORIETY. n. s. [notoriété, French; notorietas, Latin.] Public knowledge; public exposure.

We find that a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all these remarkable passages; and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature to be exposed to public notoriety. Addison.

NOTORIOUS. adj. [notorius, Latin; notaire, French.] Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence, by those who do not know the true sig-nification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether public or secret.

What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notari- Whigsfre.

The goodness of your intercepted pickets
You writ to the pope against the king, your goodness, Shakspeare.

Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.
Shakspeare.

I shall have law in Ephesus, Shakspeare.
In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious.
Davies.

This presbyterian man of war congratulates a certain notorious muftic, committed by a zealot of his own devotion. Waller.

We think not fit to condemn the most notorious misfaction before he hath had licence to propose his plea. Pell.

What notori service is there that doth not bie with a man's reputation? Talbot.

The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notori for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Johnson.

The bishops have procured time in the advancement of rent, although it be notori that they do not receive the third penny of the tithes. Southey.

NOTORIOUSLY. adv. [from notorious.]
Publickly; evidently; openly.

The exposing himself notori, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarendon.

This is *notori*ly discoverable in some differences of bulk or form. Brown.

Ovid tells us, that the eagle was *notori*ly known at Rome, though it be best to observe to other ages. Dryden.

Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion, which do all *notori*ly vary in every age.
Johnson.

NOTORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from notorious.]
Publick fame; notoriety.

To NOTI. v. a. To hear. Answer.

NOTWITHAT. n. f. [not and without.]

Of wheat there are two sorts, French, which is headed, and requireth the best soil, and not- withat, so termed because it is unbanded, being contented with a meaner earth. Cato.

NOTWITHSTANDING. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun;
as, he is rich notwithstanding he is less; it is not so proper to say, he is rich not- withstanding he has lost much, yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]

1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.

Those on whom Christ bestows miraculous cures, were so transported, that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Dryden.

2. Although. It is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, and yet not weaken him for a time, in order to a new assault into the remaining matter, and draw into it new supplies. Johnson.

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker.

The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven:
notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

NOTUS. n. f. [Latin.] The southwind.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Notus and Ater black, with thunderous clouds From Sierra Luana. Milton's Paradise Lost.

ducer of something new.

NOVEL. adj. [novellus, Latin; nouvelle,
French.]

1. New; not ancient; not used of old;
unusual.

The Presbyterians are exacters of submission to their novel injunctions before they are stamped with the authority of law. King Charles.
It is no novel usage, but though void of other title, has the pretence of many ages. Dryden.

Such is the constant strain of this blessed saint, who every where brands the Arian doctrine, as the new, novel, upstart heresy, folly and madness. Waller.

2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment by the novel constitutions, burial may not be denied to any one. Waller.

NOVEL. n. f. [nouvelle, French.]

1. A small tale, generally of love.

Nothing of a foreign nature, like the trifling novels which Apollon inserted in his poems. Dryden.
His mingled fame in bobolus pastoral
The cowards' novels, and the duncans' toils. Pope.

2. A law annexed to the code.

By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a priester till he was thirty-five years of age, though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above twenty. Aylmer.

NOVELTY. n. f. [from novel.]

1. Innovator; asserter of novelty.

Telephus, who hath renounced the philosophy of Parmenides is the best of novelty. Pope.
The others of this time were not schismatical, or novelty in the means of the isbath. Waller.

Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,
Yet that great soul our novelty was unreach. Dryden.

The foolishness of some affected novelty have discredited the novelty. Johnson.

The abettors and fasciners of them he ranks with the Montons, Argenmonites, and various others, condemn'd heretics, brands them as novel- ty of the isbath appearing. Waterland.

2. A writer of novels.

NOVELTY. n. f. [nouvelty, French.]

1. Newness; state of being unknown to former times.

They which do that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm and doing will, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty. Hooker.

2. Freshness; recentness; newness with respect to a particular person.

Novelty is only in request, and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course. Shakspeare.

As reason entertains our speculations with great brightness, so it enlivens them with new, and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety. Southey.

NOVEMBER. n. f. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.

November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black upon his head. Peacham.

NOVENARY. n. f. [novenarius, Latin.]

Number of nine; nine collectively.

It demy by parts and numbers impleth climacterical years, that is, septennaries and novenaries. Brown.

Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural flock of nine quaternions, or four novena- ries, their nature and differences be most obvious to be understood. Holder.

NOVERCAL. adj. [novercalis, from no-verca, Latin.] Having the manner of a stepmother; befeeling a stepmother.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more no-
vercal way. Dryden.

NOUGHT. n. f. [ne aught, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write aught not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not naught for nothing; but a custom has irreversibly prevailed of using naught for bad, and naught for nothing.]

1. Not any thing; nothing.

Who cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?
Bad is the world, and it will come to naught,
When such ill dealings must be seen in the night. Shakspeare.

Such smiling rogues as these smooth every passion Rage, aiming, and turn their hellish looks
With every gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing naught, like dogs, but still wiling. Shakspeare.

Ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Job, ch. 24.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machination come to naught. Milton.

2. In no degree. A kind of adverbial signification, which nothing has sometimes.

In young Rinaldo hence desires he spy'd,
And noble heart, of self impatient,
To wealth or sovereign power he naught apply'd. Pope.

3. To set at NOUGHT. Not to value;
to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

Ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof. Prov. i. 25.

NOVICE. n. f. [novice, French; novitius,
Latin.]

1. One not acquainted with any thing; a fresh man; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

Triple-twin'd whore! 'tis thou Hast sold me to this novice. Shakspeare.

Bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curfew throw. Shakspeare.

We have novices and apprentices, then the succession of the former employed men do not fail. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are plying his full purse and his empty pate. Southey.

I am

I am young, a novice in the trade,
The fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;
And want the soothing arts that catch the fair,
But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.
And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain.
Dryden.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances, by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only.
Newton's Opticks.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow; a probationer.

NOVI'TIATE. n. f. [noviciat, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

of nuns; of women under a vow of chastity, dedicated to the severer duties of religion.

I put your sister into a nunnery, with a strict command not to see you, for fear you should have wrought upon her to have taken the habit.
Dryden.

NUPTIAL. adj. [nuptial, French; nup-tialis, Latin.] Pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Confirm that unity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
Rome to England's king. Shakspeare.

Because propagation of families proceedeth from the nuptial copulation, I desired to know of him what laws and customs they had concerning marriage. Bacon.

Then, when he sat
They light the nuptial torch. Milton's Par. I. 3.

Whoever will partake of God's secrets, must pare off whatsoever is amiss, not eat of this sacrifice with a defiled head, nor come to this feast without a nuptial garment. Taylor.

Wied with her love, and with ambition led,
[neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden.

Our eternal peace be seal'd by this,
The first aidout of a nuptial kiss. Dryden.

NUPTIALS. n. f. Like the Latin without singular. [nuptiae, Latin.]

1. Marriage.

This is the triumph of the nuptial day,
My better nuptials, which in spite of fate,
For ever join me to my dear Morat. Dryden.

2. It is in Shakspeare singular, but con-trarily to use.

Lift up your countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which
We two have sworn shall come. Shakspeare.

NURSE. n. f. [nourrice, French.]

1. A woman that has the care of another's child.

Unnatural curiosity has taught all women, but the beggar, to find out nurses, which necessity only ought to commend. Ralegh.

2. A woman that has care of a sick person.

Never master had
A page so kind, so dutiful, diligent,
So feat, to nurse-like. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

One Mrs. Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook. Shakspeare.

3. One who breeds, educates, or protects.

Rome, the nurse of judgement,
Invited by your noble self, hath sent
One general tongue unto us. Shakspeare Henry VIII.

We must lose
The country, our dear nurse, or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. Shakspeare Coriolanus.

4. An old woman in contempt.

Can tales more senseless, ludicrous, and vain,
By winter-fires old nurses entertain? Blackmore.

Addison.

4. To tend the sick.

5. To pamper; to foment; to encourage; to soften; to cherish.

And what is strength, but an effect of youth,
which if time nurse, how can it ever cease? Dante.

By what fate has vice so thriven amongst us,
and by what hands been nursed up into so uncon-trived a dominion? Locke.

NURSER. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. One that nurses. Not used.

See where he lies, inhered in the arms
Of the most bloody nurse of his harms. Shakspeare.

2. A promoter; a fomentor.

NURSERY. n. f. [from nurse.]

1. The act or office of nursing.

I lov'd her most, and thought to set my rest
On her kind nursery. Shakspeare's King Lear.

2. That which is the object of a nurse's care.

She went forth among her fruits and flowers,
To visit how they prosper'd; bud and bloom
Her nursery; they at her coming sprang,
And touch'd by her fair tendance gladder grew.
Milton.

3. A plantation of young trees to be transplanted to other ground.

Your nursery of stocks ought to be in a more barren ground than the ground is whereunto you remove them. Bacon.

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up.

I th' swathing cloaths, the other from their nursery
Were stol'n. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the dismal prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At mis's elb w when he lies;
Or stands before the nursery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars. Prior.

They have publick nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated.
Swift.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children; or whence any thing is to be removed, from a nursery of trees.

This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life,
and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.

To see fair Adria, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakspeare.

A luxurious court is the nursery of diseases; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.

A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry.
Dryden.

NURSING. n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.

Then was she held in foreign dignity,
And made the nursing of nobility. Spenser.

I was his nursing once, and choice delight,
His destin'd from the womb. Milton's Agonistes.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare.
Dryden.

NURTURE. n. f. [contracted from nourriture, French.]

1. Food; diet.

For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Education; institution. Little used.

She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.

The thorny point
Of bare distress, hath ta'en from me the shew
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakspeare As you like it.

To NURTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To educate; to train; to bring up.

Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurtured it in thy law, and reformed it with thy judgment. 2 Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten. Watson.

When an insolent despiser of discipline, nurtured into into impudence, shall appear before a church governor, severity and resolution are that governor's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.

They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley.

To NUSTLE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nurse. See NUZZLE. Ainsworth.

NUT. n. f. [hnut, Saxon; noot, Dutch; noix, French.]

1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the centre of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.

One chance'd to find a nut

In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel root,

There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er to mad,

I'll let you saie from peril. Drayton's Nymph's.
Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.

NU'TROWN. adj. [nut and brown]

Brown like a nut kept long.

Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long daylight fail,
Then to the spicy nutchbrown ale. Milton's Poems.

When this nutchbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Hudibras.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutchbrown lass, Elithacis,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss. Dryden.

King Haidenute, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout, Carous'd in nutchbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

NU'TCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.]
An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nut-crackers. Addison's Spectator.

NU'TGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Hard excrescence of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the ourlandish oak. Brown.

NU'THATCH. } n. f. [picus martius]

NU'TJOBBER. } A bird. Ainsworth.

NU'TPECKER. }

NU'THOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.]

1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.

Nutbook, nutbook, you lie. Shakspeare Henry IV.

NU'TMEG. n. f. [nut and muguet, French.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in pickle, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. Hill.

The second integument, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown.

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. Sandy.

NU'TSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.]

1. The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakspeare.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.

NU'TTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts.

Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Peacham.

Like beating nuttrees, make a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Lat.]

Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.

NU'TRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Lat.]

That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,

Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shak.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?

And is not virtue in mankind
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Misc.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.]

Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arbutnot.

NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutrio, Latin; nutrition, French.]

1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the Aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Glare's Scylla.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesenteries is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the Aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbutnot.

2. That which nourishes; nutriment.

Let's properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,

To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.]

Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see

Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain

Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within. Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbutnot.

NU'TRITIVE. adj. [from nutrio, Latin.]

Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.

While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they suffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through. Blackmore.

NU'TRITURE. n. f. [from nutrio, Latin.]

The power of nourishing. Not used.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture. Harvey.

To NUZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.

Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorn them that would seek reformation. Sidney.

2. To go with the nose down like a hog.

He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot.

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbutnot's John Bull.

The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. f. [νύμφη; nympha, Latin.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.

And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nympb along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nympb I dare not, need not name. Wallier.

NYMPHISH. adj. [from nympb.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nympbish war. Drayton.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.

Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buidest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

O.

O A K

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a fervile a subjoined; as, moan; or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scroll; and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger!

Decay of Piety.

O! were he present, that his eyes and hands might see, and urge, the death which he commands.

Dryden.

2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold

The vasty field of France? or may we cram within this wooden O, the very casks That did affright the air at Agincourt?

Shaksp.

OAF. n. f. [This word is variously written; auff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy; in German als, from which elf; and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.

These, when a child haps to be got, Which after proves an idiot, When folk perceives it thriveth not, The fault therein to smother.

Some silly doating brainless calf, That understands things by the half, Says that the fairy left this oaf,

And took away the other. Drayton's Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OAFISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OAFISHNESS. n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dulness.

OAK. n. f. [ac, æc, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from oaks. a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or ok, says the grave critick, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength. and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἀλκῆ, strength; by taking the three first letters, and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five.

Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak.

Shaksp.

He lay along

Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood.

Shak.

No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak. for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk.

Bacon's Natural History.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees, Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees: Three centuries he grows, and three he stays Supreme in state; and in three more decays.

Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak.

Locke.

A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incrustured and affixed to oak leaves.

Woodward on Foss.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we The weeping amber and the balmy tree, While by our oaks the precious loads are born, And realms commanded which those trees adorn.

Pope.

OAK EVERGREEN. n. f. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world.

Miller.

OAKAPPLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks.

Bacon's Natural History.

OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r.

Milton.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led, With each an oaken chaplet on his head.

Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompence of one who had covered a citizen in battle.

Adelphon.

He snatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

OAKENPIN. n. f. An apple.

Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form.

Mortimer.

OAKUM. n. f. [A word probably formed

O A T

by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships of old feet and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and washes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed.

Raleigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift; Their left hand does the calking non guide, The rattling mallet with the right they lift.

Dryd.

OAD. n. f. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with oar, to plow; aro, Latin.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

Th' oars were silver,

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made The water which they beat, to follow faster, As amorous of their strokes.

Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

So tow'rd's a ship the oar finn'd gallies ply, Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly, Stands but to fall reveng'd.

Denham's Poems.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide, E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,

Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryd. Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate.

Wilkins.

TO OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the ruin rode, And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood.

Pope.

TO OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.

His bold head

Bore the contentious wave, he kept, and oar'd Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes To th' shore.

Shakspere's Tempest.

OARY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.

The swan with arched neck,

Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows Her state with oary feet.

Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet, In oary films, and shape his oary feet.

Addison.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use.

Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried.

Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron.

Peacham.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shaksp.
OATH. n. f. [aith, Gothick; að, Sax.]
The distance between the noun oath,
and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou then did'st rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths
Descended into perjury to love me. Shaksp.

All the oath-rites laid,
I then ascended her adorned bed. Chapman.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath. A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,

Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shaksp.

Shaksp. Henry IV.
God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obduracy. South.

OBDURATE. n. f. [obduratus, Latin.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain
thee;

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shaksp.

If when you make your prayers,

God should be so obdurate as yourselves,

How would it fare with your departed souls? Shaksp.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;

Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shaksp.

To convince the proud what signs avail,

Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;

They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least

My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryd.

2. Hardened; firm; stubborn; always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hobbes.

A pleasing forcery could charm

Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite

Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast

With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, ob-

durate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

tence.

OBDURATION. n. f. [from obduratus.]

Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduracy in evil, that through a forward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constantly those things, for which conscience was prejudiced? Hobbes.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduracy. Hammond.

OBDURED. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdured,

And to rebellious fight rallied their powers

Intestate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

OBEEDIENCE. n. f. [obediencia, Fr. obe- diencia, Latin.] Obsequiousness; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shaksp.

Thy husband

Craves no other tribute at thy hands,

But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shaksp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obay, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. iv. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange

obedience to a commission, for men to furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon.

In vain thou bidst me to forbear,

Obedience were rebellion here. Conway.

Nor can this be,

But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,

Obedience to the law of God, imposed On penalty of death. Milton's Paradise Lost.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him. Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth, are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him. Law.

OBE'DIENT. adj. [obediens, Lat.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot

She, seemingly obedient, like wife hath

Made promise. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

to make them obedient to government, and peaceable

one towards another. Tillotson.

The chief his order give, with due regard,

With due obedience, wait the chief command. Page.

OBE'DIENTIAL. adj. [obediens, French; from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obe- dient submission to the command. Hammond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obedient submission to the commands.

Wake's Prep. for Death.

OBE'DIENTLY. adv. [from obedient.]
With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obe- diently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

OBEISANCE. n. f. [obeisance, French.]
This word is formed by corruption from abaisance, an act of reverence.] A bow;
a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,

See dress'd in all suits like a lady;

Then call him Madam, do him all obeisance. Shaksp.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king.

1 Kings, i. 16.

The lords and ladies paid

Their homage, with a low obeisance made;

And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

OBELEISK. n. f. [obeliscus, Latin.]

1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,

And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].

He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.

To seek in rule, in ceremony, and away,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakespeare.

Let not him enter in your mortal body, that ye should obey, in the lust the conf. Romans, vi, 12.
The ancient hunter yet a leoparded king obeyed. Dryden.

Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Athen's Paralytic, Legg.

Attack and India shall his power obey,
He shall extend his propagated way
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obéir au roi.

He commanded the trumpets to sound, to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courts, breaking their slaves. Sidney.

The first bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, in the did desire. Spenser.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Romans.
Not did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.

Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.

OBJECT. n. f. [objet, French; objectum, Latin.]

1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.

The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dur'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakespeare's Henry V.

They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Darwin.

The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God. God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hilmond.

The act of faith is applied to the object according to the nature of it; to what is already past, as past, to what is to come, as still to come; to that which is present, as it is still present. Perizon.

Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sparr.

Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden's Dufresny.

As you have no mistress to serve, to let your own soul be the object of your daily care and attendance. Larue.

2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.

Dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any object. Shakespeare.

Why else this double object in our sight,
Of sight pursu'd in the air, and on the ground. Milton.

This passenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Attelury.

3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by something else.

The adverbial after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, object of the verb. Clarke.

OTGLASS. n. f. Glass remotest from the eye.

An object-glass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch, with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newton's Opticks.

TO OBJECT. v. a. [objecter, French; objectio, objectum, Latin.]

1. To oppose; to present in opposition.

Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.

2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse: with to or against.

Were it not some kind of blindness to be like unto misdeeds and heartens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Hobbes.

The book requirerth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered. Hobbes.

Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to objection and several difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requirerth a new work, which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. Bacon.

The old truth was, object ingratitude, and ye object all crimes: and is it not as old a truth, is it not a higher truth, object rebellion, and ye object all crimes? Hobbes.

This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sparr.

It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.

Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison.

There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.

2. Criminal charge.

Speak on, Sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. Adverse argument.

There is a objection to all estates a secret war. I know well this objection to the objection and not the decision; and that it is after retorted. Bacon.

Whosoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet.

4. Fault found.

I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Watts's Letter.

OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectif, Fr. objectus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself, and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts's Logic.

2. Made an object; proposed as an object: residing in objects.

If this one small piece of nature still affords new matters for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]

1. In manner of an object.

This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that same object of the mind. Locke.

2. In the state of an object.

The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he is a receiver of the rays of his antipathy and venomous emission, which objectively move his sense. Brown.

OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.]

The state of being an object.

Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.

But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man immortal made. Blackmore.

Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley.

OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from obligo, Lat. obligation, French.]

1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

There was no means for him as a Christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

Nothing can be more reasonable than that such creatures should be under the obligation of accepting such evidence, as in itself is sufficient for their conviction. Wilkins.

The

The better to satisfy this obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryd.
No ties can bind, that from constraint arise,
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies. Granville.
2. An act which binds any man to some performance.

The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation passed only by a personal act; but if it passed from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen.

Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.

Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself?

L'Esperance.

So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South.

OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatoire, French; from obligate.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive: with to or on.

And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bacon.

As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.

A people long used to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.

If this patent is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void.

To OBLIGE. v. a. [obligere, French; obligeo, Latin.]

1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.

All these have moved me, and some of them obliged me to commend these my labours to your grace's patronage. White.

The church hath been thought fit to be called Catholic, in reference to the universal obedience which it precepteth, both in regard of the persons, obliging men of all conditions, and in relation to the precepts, requiring the performance of all the evangelical commands. Pea son.

Religion obliges men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.

The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed, if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Regis.

2. To indebt; to lay obligations of gratitude.

He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless truth. Waller.

Since love obliges not, I from this hour Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven would soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more. Dryden.

When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.

To those hills we are obliged for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.

3. To please; to gratify.

A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South.

Some natures are so sour and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Esperance.

Happy the people, who preserve their honour,
By the same duties that oblige their prince!

Addison's Cato.

OBLIGEE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal or written contract.

OBLIGEMENT. n. f. [obligement, Fr.] Obligation.

I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligation, that you lay upon me.

One by his view

Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Spenser.

If found he stopped and rereruffled, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon.

May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade for twelve that burn. Prior.

Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which shone,
That fatal day the mighty work was done,
With rays oblique upon the Gallic sun. Prior.

It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion.

Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views, which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Brace.

2. Not direct; indirect; by a side glance.

Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle?
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shaks.

Which else to several species thou must ascribe
Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

2. Deviation from moral rectitude.

There is in rectitude, beauty, as a contrarywise in obliquity, deformity. Hooker.

Count Rhodophil, cut out for government and high affairs, and balancing all matters in the scale of his high understanding, hath rectified all obliquities. Howell.

For a rational creature to conform himself to the will of God in all things, carries in it a rational rectitude or goodness; and to disobey or oppose his will in any thing, imports a moral obliquity. South.

To OBLITERATE. v. a. [oblitero, ob and latus, Latin.]

1. To efface any thing written.

2. To wear out; to destroy; to efface.

Wars and desolations obliterate many ancient monuments. Hale.

Let men consider themselves as ensnared in that unhappy contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Deay of Pircy.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Lat.]

Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transmigration, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakspeare's Troil. and Cressida.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shakspeare.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and wantantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brace.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion? Scotch.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesty; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Dugue.

OBVIOUS. adj. [obvisus, Latin.]
Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written trouble of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The British toils
Fruit to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd, well-avenge'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none in fee awake!
Behold the wonders of th' Italian lake. Pope.

OBLONG. adj. [oblong, French; oblongus, Latin.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harris.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a desert. Temple's Miscellanies.

Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Bentley.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong] In an oblong form.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth, or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cory.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong] The state of being oblong.

OBLIQUE. n. f. [obliquus, Latin.]
1. Centurious speech; blame, slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being Deferentially subject unto that bitter kind of obliquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions;
so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Locke.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old defects. Daniel's Civil War.
Canst thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounc'd and sworn?

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction?
Addison.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants.
Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy if th' world
In me to lose. Shakespeare.

OBMUTE SCENCE. n. f. [from obmutus, Latin.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutus. Brown.

OBNOXIOUS. adj. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the heretofore discourses of pharsies, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Locke.

2. Liable to punishment.

A poor obnoxious, this traitor land,
Like fasting Hester, as before you stand,
We charge your sceptre. Waller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's judgements, and that he is a God of mercy and patience;
and that we might not have the least suspicion of unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and death, to expiate our offences. Calamy.
Thy name, O Venerable, the kinder power
our plains; and it held the Mantuan towers,

Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme Shall raise aloft. Dryden.

3. Reprehensible; not of sound reputation.

Conceiving it most reasonable to search for primitive truth in the primitive writers, and not to suffer his understanding to be preposited by the contrived and interested schemes of modern, and withal obnoxious authors. Fell.

4. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts.
Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Descend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd, obnoxious first or last,
To base things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To Jews obnoxious on the gassy floor. Dryden.

They leave the government a trunk naked, defenceless, and obnoxious to every storm. Davenant.

OBNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxious.]

Subjection; liability to punishment.

OBNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxious.]

In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

OBNOBILATE. v. a. [obnubilare, Lat.]

To cloud; to obscure.

OBOLUS. n. f. [obolus, Latin.] In pharmacy, twelve grains. Ainsworth.

OBREPTION. n. f. [obreptio, Latin.]

The act of creeping on with secrecy or by surprise.

OBROGATE. v. a. [obrogo, Latin.]

To proclaim a contrary law for the dissolution of the former. Dist.

OBSCENE. adj. [obscenus, Fr. obscenus, Latin.]

1. Indecent; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemos th' obscene dread of Moab's sons. Milt.
Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Watts's Logick.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A gildle foul with greafe mends his obscene attire. Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the sciences down to death pursu'd,
And of the light obscene to lately view'd. Dryd.

3. Inauspicious; ill-omened.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight.

It is the sun's fate like your's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope's Letters.

OBSCENELY. adv. [from obscene] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCENENESS. n. f. [obscenitas, French,

OBSCENITY. } from obscene.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity;
lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit. Dryden.

These fables were temper'd with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obscenity. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber dunking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenity of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, Latin.]

1. The act of darkening.

2. A state of being darkened.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuration or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Burnet.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber dunking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenity of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber dunking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenity of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscur, French; obscurus, Latin.]

1. Dark; unenlightened; gloomy, hindering sight.

Whoso curseth his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Proverbs.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night.
Shakespeare.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryden.

4. Not noted; not observable.

He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark. Attorney.

TO OBSCURE. v. a. [obscurare, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shakespeare.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.

2. To make less visible.

What must I hold a candle to my shames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.
Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakespeare.

Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God, he infringed the omniscency and essential ubiquity of his Maker. Brown's Vul. Et.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private consent it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writing, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured
by the writings of learned men, as this. Wake.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think'st thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the same,
And seest not sin obscures thy godlike frame?

I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryd.

5. To conceal; to make unknown.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To sun or starlight, spread their umbrage broad.

Milton.

OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscurus.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously; darkly.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

Such was the rite of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryd.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison.

3. Not clearly; not plainly; darkly to the mind.

The woman's seed at first obscurely told,
Now amplier known, thy favour and thy lord. Milt.

OBSCURITAS. n. f. [obscuritas, Latin;

OBSCURITY. } obscuritas, French.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish upon the earth. Ezra, xi. 3.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as thine are:
I could lend them obscuring now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Dante.

2. Unnoticed

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurely design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.

Dryden.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscureness that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure.

Boyle on Colours.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me.

Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity.

Locke.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscratio, from obscurus, Latin.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuration.

Stillingfl.

OBSEQUIES. n. f. [obsequies, French.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequie, Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilaus valiantly requiting his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies.

Sidney.

Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With funeral obsequies adorn thy tomb.

Shakespeare.

I spare the widows tears, their woeful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Theseus at these funerals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss.

Dryden.

His body shall be royally interr'd,
I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies.
Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies.

Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy.
Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house.

Milton's Agonistes.

OBSEQUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not to the rising son, that you forget the father, who rais'd you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Baron.
At his command th' up-rooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went obsequious.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; the what was honour knew,
And, with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason.
See how th' obsequious wind and liquid air
The Theban swan does upward bear.

Cowley.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature.

Boyle.

His servants weeping,
Obsequious to his orders, bear him higher. Addison.
The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party.

Savisi.

2. In Shakespeare, it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Vol. II.

Your father lost a father;

That father his; and the survivor bound

In filial obligation, for some term,

To do obsequious sorrow.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,

At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw.

Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation.

Locke.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament

The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster.

Shakespeare.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obsequious.] Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the sweetest and the readiest way to advance a man.

Scutb.

OBSEVRABLE. adj. [from obsevero, Lat.]

Remarkable; eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with obsevrable ceremonies.

Albion.

These proprieties affix'd unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those obsevrable points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations.

Brown.

I took a just account of every obsevrable circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal.

Woodward's Natural History.

The great and more obsevrable occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom.

Rogers.

OBSEVRABLY. adv. [from obsevrable.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky, as is obsevrably recorded in some histories.

Brown.

OBSEVRANCE. n. f. [obsevrance, French; obsevero, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,

Where I did meet thee once with Helena,

To do obsevrance on the morn of May.

Shakespeare.

Art thou left his bed, resolv'd to pay
Obsevrance to the month of merry May.

Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy obsevrances, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life.

Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all th' obsevrance of civility,

Like one well studied in a sad offence

To please his grandam.

Shakespeare.

Love rigid honesty

And strict obsevrance of impartial laws.

Roocommon.

If the divine laws were propoed to our obsevrance, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an advice.

Rogers's Sermons.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict obsevrances;

As, not to see a woman.

Shakespeare.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our Creator in all those ordinances which he has prescribed to the obsevrance of his church.

Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant obsevrance of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard; reverential attention.

Having had such experience of his fidelity as obsevrance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him.

Milton.

OBSEVRANT. adj. [obsevrans, Latin.]

1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.

These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were obsevrant spectators of those masters they admired.

Raleigh.

Wandering from climate to climate obsevrant they'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd.

Pope.

2. Obedient; respectful; with of.

We are told how obsevrant Alexander was of his master Aristotle.

Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

3. Respectfully attentive; with of.

She now obsevrant of the parting ray,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day.

Pope.

4. Meantly dutiful; submissive.

How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an obsevrant slavish course.

Raleigh.

OBSEVRANT. n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakespeare.] A slavish attendant. Not in use.

These kind of knaves in this plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupt ends,
Than twenty filthy ducking obsevrants;
That stretch their duties nicely.

Shakespeare.

OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, from obsevero, Latin; observation, French.]

1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.

These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it.

The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation.

Rogers.

2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.

In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it.

Watts's Logic.

3. Obedience; ritual practice.

He freed and delivered the Christian church from the external observation and obedience of all such legal precepts, as were not simply, and formally moral.

White.

OBSERVATOR. n. f. [observateur, French; from obsevero, Latin.] One that observes; a remarker.

The observer of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away.

Hale.

She may be handsome, yet be chaste, you say,
Good observer, not so fast away.

Dryden.

OBSERVATORY. n. f. [observatoire, Fr.]

A place built for astronomical observations.

Another was found near the observatory in Greenwich Park.

Woodward on Fossils.

To OBSERVE. v. a. [observer, Fr. obsevero, Lat.]

1. To watch; to regard attentively.

Remember, that as thine eye observes others, so art thou observed by angels and by men.

Taylor.

2. To find by attention; to note.

It is observed, that many men who have seemed to repent when they have thought death approaching, hate yet, after it hath pleas'd God to restore them to health, been as wicked, perhaps worse, as ever they were.

Duty of Man.

If our idea of infinity be got from the power we observe in ourselves, at repeating without end our own ideas, it may be demand'd why we do not attribute infinity to other ideas, as well as these of space and duration.

One may observe them discourse and reason pretty well, of several other things, before they can tell twenty.

Locke.

3. To

3. To regard or keep religiously.

A night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of Egypt. Exodus, xli. 42.

5. To obey; to follow.

6. OBSERVE. v. n.

1. To be attentive.

Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watt.

2. To make a remark.

I observe, that when we have an action against any man, we must for all that look upon him as our neighbour, and love him as ourselves, paying him all that justice, peace and charity, which are due to all persons. Kentwell.

Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case of some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Letters.

OBSERVER. n. s. [from observare]

1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remarker.

He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks Quite through the deed of men. Shakespeare.
Angelo.

There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Careful observers may foretell the hour,
By sure prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.

2. One who looks on; the beholder.

If a slow-paced star had stol'n away,
From the observer's marking, he might stay
Three hundred years to see it again. Donne.
Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice,
By sharing it, and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South.
Sometimes purulent matter may be discharged from the glands in the upper part of the wind-pipe, while the lungs are sound and uninfected, which now and then has imposed on undistinguishing ob- server's. Blackmore.

3. One who keeps any law or custom or practice.

Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser.

The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused 'le Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Baron.

He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break
it. Pror.

Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Atterbury.

OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observare.]

Attentively; carefully.

There is some snail of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly discern it out. Shakespeare.

Belonging to a siege. Diet.

OBSOLETE. adj. [from obsoletus, Latin.]

Worn out of use; disused; unfashionable.
These words may be laudably revived, when they are more sounding, or more significant than the old. Dryden.

What if there be an old dormant statute or two against him, are they not now obsolete? Swift.

OBSOLETNESS. n. s. [from obsoletus.]

State of being worn out of use; unfashionableness.

OBSTACLE. n. s. [from obstacle, French; obstaculum, Latin.]

Something opposed; hindrance; obstruction.

Conscience is a blushing shame-fac'd spirit,
That mutinies in a man's bottom: it fills
One full of obstacle. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe reverence and due of birth. Shakespeare.
Disparity in age seems a greater obstacle to an intimate friendship than inequality of fortune. For the humours, business, and diversions, of young and old, are generally very different. Collins.

Some conjectures about the origin of mountains and islands, I am obliged to look into, that they may not remain as obstacles to the left skittul.
Woodward's Natural History.

What more natural and usual obstacle to those who take voyages, than winds and storms. Pope.

OBSTETRICIAN. n. s. [from obstetricor, Latin.]

The office of a midwife.

OBSTETRICAL. adj. [from obstetrica, Latin.]

Midwifish; befitting a midwife; doing the midwife's office.

There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetric hand. Pope.

OBSTINACY. n. s. [from obstinatus, French; obstinatio, Latin; from obstinatus.]

Stubbornness; contumacy; pertinacy; persistency.

Choosing rather to use extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than apply moderate remedies. Kemp Charles.

Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions or words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.

What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope.

OBSTINATE. adj. [from obstinatus, Latin.]

Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. As a quality used, it has an ill sense; but relative, it is neutral.

The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Yield,

Except you mean with obstinate repulse
To slay your sovereign. Shakespeare.

I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.

Her father did not fail to find,
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.

Look on Simon's mate,
No ais so meek, no ais so obstinate. Pope.

OBSTINATELY. adv. [from obstinatus.]

Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.

Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon.
A Greek made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die unslighted, or to circumvent. Dryden.

The man resolv'd, and steady to his trust,
Inflexible to ill, and obstinately just,
Can the rude rabble's influence resist. Addison.

My fix'd mind maintains his royal trust,
Tho' tempted chaste, and obstinately just. Pope.

OBSTINATENESS. n. s. [from obstinatus.]

Stubbornness.

OBSTINATION. n. s. [from obstipare, Lat.]

The act of stopping up any passage.

OBSTREPEROUS. adj. [from obstreperus, Lat.]

Loud; clamorous; noisy; turbulent;
vociferous.

Those obstreperous scepticks are the bane of divinity, who are so full of the spirit of contradiction, that they raise daily new disputes. Hovell.

Those obstreperous villains shout, and know not for what they make a noise. Dryden.

The players do not only connive at his obstre- perous approbation, but repair at their own cost whatever damages he makes. Addison.

OBSTREPEROUSLY. adv. [from obstreperus.]

Loudly; clamorously; noisily.

OBSTREPEROUSNESS. n. s. [from obstreperus.]

Loudness; clamour; noise;
turbulence.

OBSTRUCTION. n. s. [from obstruere, Latin.]

Obligation; bond.
He hath full right to exempt
Whom so it pleases him by choice,
From national obstruction. Milton's Agonistes.

To OBSTRUCT. v. a. [from obstruere, Latin.]

1. To block up; to bar.
He them beholding, soon
Comes down to see their city, ere the tow'r Obstructs them in their way. Milton's Paradise Lost.
In their passage through the glands in the lungs,
they obstruct and swell them with little tumours. Blackmore.

Fat people are subject to weakness in fevers, because the fat, melted by feverish heat, obstructs
the small canals. Arbuthnot.

2. To oppose; to retard; to hinder; to be in the way of.

No cloud interpos'd,
On star to obstruct his light. Milton.

OBSTRUCTION. n. s. [from obstruere.]

One that hinders or opposes.

OBSTRUCTION. n. s. [from obstruere, Latin; obstruction, French, from obstruere.]

1. Hindrance; difficulty.
Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt Christian kings. Denham.

2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.

All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. Kemp Charles.

In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon.

Whenever a popular assembly, free from obstruc- tions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Swift.

3. [In physick.]

The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quincy.

4. In Shakespeare it once signifies something heaped together.

Aye, but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot,
This is the vilest motion to become A obstructed clod. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

OBSTRUCTIVE. adj. [from obstruere, French, from obstruere.]

Hindering; causing impediment.
Having thus separated, this doctrine of God's predetermining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstriding all good life. Hammond.

OBSTRUCTIVE. n. f. Impediment; obstacle.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary,
that faith is the only instrument of his justification, and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it. Hammond.

OBSTRUENT. adj. [obstruens, Latin.]
Hindering; blocking up.

OBSTUPEFACTION. n. f. [obstupefacio, Latin.] The act of inducing stupidity,
or interruption of the mental powers.

OBSTUPEFACTIVE. adj. [from obstupefacio, Latin.] Obstructing the mental powers; stupifying.

The force of it is obstupefactive, and no other.
Abbot.

To OBTAIN. v. a. [obtenir, French; ob-tineo, Latin.]

1. To gain; to acquire; to procure.

May be that I may obtain children by her. Gen.
We have obtained an inheritance. Ephesians, i. 11.
The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression. Artusnot.

2. To impetrate; to gain by the concession or excited kindness of another.

In such our prayers cannot serve us as means to obtain the thing we desire. Hooker.

By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.
Hebrews, ix. 12.

If they could not be obtained of the proud tyrant,
then to conclude peace with him upon any conditions. Knolles.

Some pray for riches, riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers for their wealth are slain.
Dryden.

The conclusion of the story I forbore, because I could not obtain from myself to shew Absalom unfortunate. Dryden.

Whatever once is denied them, they are certainly not to obtain by crying. Locke on Education.

To OBTAIN. v. n.

1. To continue in use.

The Theodosian Code, several hundred years after Justinian's time, did obtain in the western parts of Europe. Eaker.

2. To be established; to subsist in nature or practice.

Our impious use no longer shall obtain,
Brothers no more, by brothers shall be slain. Dryd.

The situation of the sun and earth, which the theorist supposes, is so far from being preferable to this which at present obtains, that this hath infinitely the advantage of it. Woodward.

Where wasting the public treasure has obtained in a court, all good order is banished. Darvanti.

The general laws of fluidity, elasticity, and gravity, obtain in animal and inanimate tubes. Cheyne.

3. To prevail; to succeed. Not in use.

There is due from the judge to the advocate,
some commendation where causes are fair pleaded;
especially towards the side which obtaineth not. Bac.

OBTAINABLE. adj. [from obtain.]

1. To be procured.

Spirits which come over in distillation, miscible with water, and wholly combustible, are obtain'd from plants by previous fermentation. Artusnot.

2. To be gained.

What thinks he of his redemption, and the rate it cost, not being obtainable unless God's only Son would come down from heaven, and be made man, and pay down his own life for it. Kettwell.

OBTAINER. n. f. [from obtain.] He who obtains.

To OBTEMPERATE. v. a. [obtemperer, French; obtempero, Latin.] To obey.
Dist.

To OBTEND. v. a. [obtendo, Latin.]

1. To oppose; to hold out in opposition.

2. To pretend; to offer as the reason of any thing.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
Obtending Heav'n for what'er ills befall. Dryden.

OBTENEBRATION. n. f. [ob and tene-bra, Latin.] Darkness; the state of being darkened; the act of darkening;
cloudiness.

In every megrim or vertigo, there is an obtenebra-tion joined with a semblance of turning round. Bar.

OBTENSION. n. f. [from obtend.] The act of obtaining.

To OBTEST. v. a. [obtestor, Latin.] To beseech; to supplicate.

Suppliants demand
A truce, with olive branches in their hand;
Obtest his clemency, and from the plain Beg leave to draw the bodies of their slain. Dryd.

OBTESTATION. n. f. [obtestatio, Latin;
from obtest.] Supplication; entreaty.

OBRECTATION. n. f. [obrectatio, Lat.]
Slander; detraction; calumny.

To OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrude, Latin.]

To thrust into any place or state by force or imposture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.

It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them; truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker.

There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them. Bacon.

Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword. King Charles.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors six books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be, under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

Why shouldst thou then obtrude this diligence
In vain, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.

Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that catalogue. Hemmond.

A cause of common error is the credulity of men; that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others.
Brown.

The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them. Locke.

Whether thy great forefathers came
From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.

OBTRUDER. n. f. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.

Do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones. Boyle.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Lat.]
The act of obtruding.

No man can think it other than the method of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtru-sions of violence, to have the mist of his error and passion dispelled. King Charles.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrude.] Inclined to force one's self, or any thing else, upon others.

Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To OBTUND. v. a. [obtundo, Lat.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to deaden.

Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies, because he esteems the blood a bridle of gall, obtunding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey.

OBTURATION. n. f. [from obturatus, Lat.] The act of stopping up any thing with something smeared over it.

OBTUSANGULAR. adj. [from obtus and angulus.] Having angles larger than right angles.

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dulled.

Obtusion of the senses, internal and external.
Harvey.

OBVENTION. n. f. [obvenio, Latin.]

Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainly; incidental advantage.

When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions, will also be more augmented and better valued. Spenser.

To OVERT. v. a. [obverso, Latin.]

To turn towards.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred the kladled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air.
Boyle.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superficials, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them
obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light.
Boyle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obverted towards us. Watts's Logic.

To OEVIAE. v. a. [from obvius, Lat.]

obvius, French.] To meet in the way;

to prevent by interception.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodward.

O'BVIOUS. adj. [obvius, Lat.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

I to the evil turn

My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milt.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such room in nature unpossess
Only to shine, yet sense to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found; Swift has used it harshly for easily intelligible.

Why was the light

To such a tender ball as th' eye contain'd,
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd? Milton.

Enterain'd with thoughts,
Where obvious duty ere while appear'd thoughtless.
Milton.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and understands it.
Dryden.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be impressed on the soul, or arise at obvious reflections of our reason, Etc.

Small natural, because they have been found in all ages.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious; the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed.

O'bvious. adv. [from obvious.]

1. Evidently; apparently.

All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush contain no instruction.

2. Easily to be found.

For Prince, Spain, and other foreign countries, the volumes of their laws and lawyers have obviously particular place and precedence of their magistrates and dignities.

3. Naturally.

We may then more obviously, yet truly liken the civil state to bulwarks, and the church to a city.

O'bviousness. n. f. [from obvious.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried; I thought their easiness, or obviousness fitter to recommend than depreciate them.

To O'bumb. v. a. [obumbro, Lat.]

To shade; to cloud.

The rays of royal majesty, reverberated so strongly upon Villorio, dispelled all those clouds which did hang over and obumbrate him.

Obumbration. n. f. [from obumbro, Lat.] The act of darkening or clouding.

O'ccasion. n. f. [occasion, French; occasio, Lat.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasion in the writings of the Apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal form.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Me unwetting, and unaware of such mishap, she brought to mischief through occasion, Where this same wicked villain did me light upon.

Because of the money returned in our sacks are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen.

Use not liberty for an occasion. Let me not let pass Occasion which now smiles.

I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring Him to his death.

With a mind as great as theirs he came To find at home occasion for his shame, Where dark confusions did the nations hide.

From th' admonition they took only occasion to reblouse their fault, and to sleep again.

This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom? That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool.

The fair for whom they strove, Nor thought, when she beheld the light from far, Her beauty was th' occasion of the war.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and up on occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former occasion.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your business calls on you, And you embrace th' occasion to depart.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never master had A page so kind, so dutious, diligent, So tender over his occasions.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money.

They who are desirous of a name in painting, should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion.

Syllogism is made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance.

A prudent chief not always must display His powers in equal ranks, and fair array, But with th' occasion and the place comply, Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly.

To O'ccasion. v. a. [occasioner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be left natural to a spirit.

The good Platonist condemns the foolish thoughts which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great increase of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables.

A consumption may be occasioned by running sores, or sinuous fistulas, whose secret caves and winding burrows empty themselves by copious discharges.

By its styptic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasion men to make several combinations of simple ideas into distinct modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language.

O'ccasional. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of scripture, to verify our explication of the deluge, according to the Mosaiical history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of scripture concerning it.

2. Producing by accident.

The ground of occasional original heresies, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Besides these constant times, there are likewise occasional times for the performance of this duty.

Those letters were not writ to all; Nor first intended but occasional, Their absent sermons.

O'ccasionally. adv. [from occasional.]

According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason on her wait, As one intended first, not after made Occasionally.

I have endeavoured to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work.

O'ccasioner. n. f. [from occasion.] One that causes, or promotes, by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners.

Some men will lead me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects miseries.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall therein and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour.

O'ccasion. n. f. [occasio, from occare, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.

Those places speak of obduration and occasion, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God.

O'ccident. n. f. [from occidens, Lat.] The west.

The envious clouds are bent To dim his glory, and to stain the track Of his bright passage to the occident.

O'ccidental. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.] Western.

Ere twice in muck and occidental damp, Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp.

If she had not been drained, she might have tiled her palaces with occidental gold and silver.

The act of killing.

To O'cclude. v. a. [occludo, Lat.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption.

O'cclosure. adj. [occlusus, Lat.] Shut up; closed.

The appulse is either plenary and occlude, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and pervious, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth.

O'cculsion. n. f. [from occlusio, Latin.]

The act of shutting up.

O'ccult. adj. [occultus, French; occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscouvrable.

If his occult guilt Do not itself unkenneled in one speech, It is a damned ghost that we have seen.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere; which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians give the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects.

O'ccultation. n. f. [occultatio, Lat.]

In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCCULTNESS. n. f. [from occult.] Secrecy; state of being hid.

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Lat.] The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [from occupans, Lat.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

TO OCCUPATE. v. a. [from occupo, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunk men are taken with a plain delusion in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupy part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon's Natural History.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupation, Fr. occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last sixscore years much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the distresses of the then infant world, so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodward.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome, And occupations perish. Shakespeare's Coriolanus. He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts.

OCCUPIER. n. f. [from occupy.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.

If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled thinly? Raleigh.

2. One who follows any employment.

Thy merchandise and the occupiers of thy merchandise shall fall into the midst of the seas. Ezek. xxvii. 27.

TO OCCUPY. v. a. [from occupier, Fr. occupo, Lat.]
